1. For the 1982 House elections in Louisiana, an open primary election was held with candidates from all parties running on the same ballot. Any candidate who received a majority was elected unopposed, with no further appearance on the general election ballot. If no candidate received 50 percent, a runoff was held between the two top finishers.

1. Contested election. A recount by a House Administration Committee task force determined that McCloskey defeated McIntyre by a four-vote margin, 116,645 (50.00085 percent) to 116,841 (49.99914 percent). On May 1, 1985, the House voted 236-190 to seat McCloskey.

2. A special election was held in conjunction with the November election. Perkins was elected to fill both the unexpired term of his father, Rep. Carl D. Perkins (D), who died Aug. 3, 1984, and the two-year term beginning Jan. 3, 1985.

3. For the 1984 House elections in Louisiana, an open primary election was held with candidates from all parties running on the same ballot. Any candidate who received a majority was elected unopposed, with no further appearance on the general election ballot. If no candidate received 50 percent, a runoff was held between the two top finishers.

4. In Minnesota the Democratic Party is known as the Democratic-Farmer-Labor Party and the Republican Party as the Independent-Republican Party; candidates appear on the ballot with these designations.

5. A special election was held in conjunction with the November election. Saxton was elected to serve both the unexpired term of Rep. Edwin B. Forsythe (R), who died March 29, 1984, and the two-year term beginning Jan. 3, 1985.

1. A special election was held to fill the unexpired term of Rep. Cecil Heftel (D), who resigned July 11, 1986.

2. For the 1986 House elections in Louisiana, an open primary election was held with candidates from all parties running on the same ballot. Any candidate who received a majority was elected unopposed, with no further appearance on the general election ballot. If no candidate received 50 percent, a runoff was held between the two top finishers.

3. In Minnesota the Democratic Party is known as the Democratic-Farmer-Labor Party and the Republican Party as the Independent-Republican Party; candidates appear on the ballot with these designations.

4. A special election was held to fill the unexpired term of Rep. Joseph P. Addabbo (D), who died April 10, 1986.

5. A special election was held to fill the unexpired term of Rep. James T. Broyhill (R), who resigned in July 1986, having been appointed to the Senate.

1. A special election was held to fill the unexpired term of Rep. Melvin Price (D), who died April 22, 1988.

2. For the 1988 House elections in Louisiana, an open primary election was held with candidates from all parties running on the same ballot. Any candidate who received a majority was elected unopposed, with no further appearance on the general election ballot. If no candidate received 50 percent, a runoff was held between the two top finishers.

3. A special election was held to fill the unexpired term of Rep. Buddy Roemer (D), who resigned March 14, 1988, having been elected governor.

4. In Minnesota the Democratic Party is known as the Democratic-Farmer-Labor Party and the Republican Party as the Independent-Republican Party; candidates appear on the ballot with these designations.

5. A special election was held to fill the unexpired term of Rep. James J. Howard (D), who died March 25, 1988.

6. A special election was held to fill the unexpired term of Rep. John J. Duncan (R), who died June 21, 1988.

7. A special election was held to fill the unexpired term of Rep. Bill Boner (D), who resigned Oct. 5, 1987, having been elected mayor of Nashville.

8. A special election was held to fill the unexpired term of Rep. W. C. Daniel (D), who died Jan. 23, 1988.

1. A special election was held to fill the unexpired term of Rep. Daniel K. Akaka (D), who resigned May 16, 1990, having been appointed to the U.S. Senate.

2. For the 1990 House elections in Louisiana, an open primary election was held with candidates from all parties running on the same ballot. Any candidate who received a majority was elected unopposed, with no further appearance on the general election ballot. If no candidate received 50 percent, a runoff was held between the two top finishers.

3. In Minnesota the Democratic Party is known as the Democratic-Farmer-Labor Party and the Republican Party as the Independent-Republican Party; candidates appear on the ballot with these designations.

4. A special election was held to fill the unexpired term of Rep. James J. Florio (D), who resigned Jan. 16, 1990, having been elected governor.

5. A special election was held to fill the unexpired term of Rep. Guy V. Molinari (R), who resigned Jan. 1, 1990.

6. A special election was held to fill the unexpired term of Rep. Robert Garcia (D), who resigned Jan. 7, 1990.

1. For the 1992 House elections in Louisiana, an open primary election was held with candidates from all parties running on the same ballot. Any candidate who received a majority was elected unopposed, with no further appearance on the general election ballot. If no candidate received 50 percent, a runoff was held between the two top finishers.

2. In Minnesota the Democratic Party is known as the Democratic-Farmer-Labor Party and the Republican Party as the Independent-Republican Party; candidates appear on the ballot with these designations.

3. A special election was held in conjunction with the November election. Nadler was elected to serve both the unexpired term of Rep. Ted Weiss (D), who died Sept. 14, 1992, and the two-year term beginning Jan. 5, 1993 in a newly renumbered district.

4. A special election was held in conjunction with the November election. Clayton was elected to serve both the unexpired term of Rep. Walter B. Jones, who died Sept. 15, 1992, and the two-year term beginning Jan. 5, 1993.

1. A special election was held to fill the unexpired term of Rep. Walter R. Tucker III (D), who resigned Dec. 15, 1995. No runoff was required because only Democrats filed for the primary.

2. For the 1996 House elections in Louisiana, an open primary election was held with candidates from all parties running on the same ballot. Any candidate who received a majority was elected unopposed, with no further appearance on the general election ballot. If no candidate received 50 percent, a runoff was held between the two top finishers.

3. A special election was held to fill the unexpired term of Rep. Kweisi Mfume (D), who resigned Feb. 15, 1996.

4. A special election was held in conjunction with the November election. Emerson was elected to serve both the unexpired term of Bill Emerson (R), who died June 22, 1996, and the two-year term beginning Jan. 7, 1997.

5. A special election was held to fill the unexpired term of Ron Wyden (D), who resigned Feb. 5, 1996, having been elected to the U.S. Senate.

6. In July 1996 a panel of federal judges declared that three Texas districts were unconstitutionally drawn. The three districts and an additional ten surrounding ones were redrawn, invalidating the March 1996 primary results for the districts. In November, candidates in the thirteen districts ran in open primaries, with only those capturing a majority of the vote winning outright. Special runoff elections were held in December for the top two finishers in the districts where no candidate received a majority of the votes cast.

1. A special all-party primary was held to fill the unexpired term of Rep. Ronald V. Dellums (D), who resigned Feb. 6, 1998. Because Lee won a majority of the vote in the first-round balloting, no runoff election was held.

2. A special election was held to fill the unexpired term of Rep. Walter Capps (D), who died Oct. 28, 1997.

3. A special all-party primary was held to fill the unexpired term of Sony Bono (R), who died Jan. 5, 1998. Because Bono won a majority of the vote in the first-round balloting, no runoff election was held.

4. A special election was held to fill the unexpired term of Rep. Steven H. Schiff (R), who died March 25, 1998.

5. A special election was held to fill the unexpired term of Rep. Floyd H. Flake (D), who resigned Nov. 15, 1997.

6. A special election was held to fill the unexpired term of Rep. Thomas M. Foglietta (D), who resigned Nov. 12, 1997.

1. Louisiana until 2008 used a unique two-tier election system, with a first round of voting in which all candidates regardless of party affiliation ran on the same ballot. Any candidate who received a majority was elected in this round. If no candidate received 50 percent or more, a runoff was held between the two top finishers. (In 2008 Louisiana instituted a primary election system similar to that used in most states.)

1. A special election was held Nov. 30, 2002, to fill the unexpired term of Patsy T. Mink (D), who died Sept. 28, 2002.

2. Louisiana until 2008 used a unique two-tier election system, with a first round of voting in which all candidates regardless of party affiliation ran on the same ballot. Any candidate who received a majority was elected in this round. If no candidate received 50 percent or more, a runoff was held between the two top finishers. (In 2008 Louisiana instituted a primary election system similar to that used in most states.)

3. A special election was held Jan. 8, 2002, to fill the unexpired term of Steve Largent (R), who resigned Feb. 15, 2002, to run for governor of Oklahoma.

1. A special election was held Jan. 4, 2003, to fill the unexpired term of Patsy T. Mink (D), who died Sept. 28, 2002. Mink had been elected posthumously in November 2002 to a seat in the 108th Congress. Case had won a special election Nov. 30, 2002, to fill the remaining weeks of her term in the 107th Congress. The January election was to fill the remainder of Mink's term in the 108th Congress.

2. A special election was held June 3, 2003, to fill the unexpired term of Larry Combest (R), who resigned May 31, 2003.

1. A special election was held Feb. 17, 2004, to fill the unexpired term of Ernie Fletcher (R), who resigned Dec. 8, 2003, to become governor of Kentucky.

2. Louisiana until 2008 used a unique two-tier election system, with a first round of voting in which all candidates regardless of party affiliation ran on the same ballot. Any candidate who received a majority was elected in this round. If no candidate received 50 percent or more, a runoff was held between the two top finishers. (In 2008 Louisiana instituted a primary election system similar to that used in most states.)

3. A special election was held July 20, 2004, to fill the unexpired term of Frank W. Balance Jr. (D), who resigned June 11, 2004, for health reasons.

4. A special election was held June 1, 2004, to fill the unexpired term of Bill Janklow (R), who resigned Jan. 20, 2004, to begin serving a prison sentence for vehicular homicide.

1. A special election was held June 6, 2006, to fill the unexpired term of Randy "Duke" Cunningham (R), who resigned Dec. 1, 2005, after pleading guilty to tax evasion and accepting bribes from defense contractors.

2. Mark Foley resigned from the House in late September 2006, too late to have his name removed from the ballot. Votes cast for Foley were credited to Joe Negron, the candidate selected by the Republican Party to replace Foley.

3. Louisiana until 2008 used a unique two-tier election system, with a first round of voting in which all candidates regardless of party affiliation ran on the same ballot. Any candidate who received a majority was elected in this round. If no candidate received 50 percent or more, a runoff was held between the two top finishers. (In 2008 Louisiana instituted a primary election system similar to that used in most states.)

4. A special election was held Nov. 7, 2006, to fill the unexpired term of Robert Menendez (D), who resigned Jan. 16, 2006, on appointment to a vacant Senate seat.

5. A special runoff election was held Dec. 12, 2006, between the top two finishers in the general election.

6. A special election was held Nov. 7, 2006, to fill the unexpired term of Tom DeLay (R), who resigned June 9, 2006, after indictment in 2005 on campaign finance violations and revelations of his close association with a lobbyist named Jack Abramoff who had pleaded guilty to federal charges of conspiracy, mail fraud, and tax evasion.

1. A special election was held April 8, 2008, to fill the unexpired term of Tom Lantos (D), who died Feb. 11, 2008.

2. A special election was held March 8, 2008, to fill the unexpired term of Dennis Hastert (R), the House Speaker under Republican control until January 2007, who resigned Nov. 26, 2007, to allow the Illinois governor to schedule an election.

3. A special election was held March 11, 2008, to fill the unexpired term of Julia Carson (D), who died Dec. 15, 2007.

4. Beginning in 2008, Louisiana adopted a system of primary elections for federal (House and Senate) races that was similar to primaries used in other states. Previously, Louisiana used a system in which House and Senate candidates, regardless of party, appeared in a first round of voting on the regular election day in November. Any candidate receiving 50 percent or more of the vote was elected; if no candidate won 50 percent or more, the top two finishers faced one another in a final round of voting. Under the new system, the state scheduled the 2008 primary elections in September, which were postponed to October because of Hurricane Gustav. A candidate still had to receive 50 percent of the vote to go on to the general election in November. Candidates in two districts—the Second and Fourth—did not receive 50 percent. In those two districts the top two vote-getters from October faced off in November to complete the primary voting and go on to a final contest in December against an opponent from the opposing party or parties. In the table for 2008 the numbers for those two districts are those of the candidates who ran in the final contest that was held on Dec. 6. All other numbers are for the Nov. 4 voting.

5. Incumbent Rep. William Jefferson (D) received 25 percent of the vote in a primary contest in October 2008, requiring that he face the next highest vote recipient, Helena Moreno, on Nov. 4. He won this contest with 56.8 percent of the vote, allowing him to proceed to a final election on Dec. 6, 2008, against three other candidates: Green, Libertarian, and Republican. The votes in the table are for the Dec. 6, 2008, voting.

6. Incumbent Rep. Paul J. Camouche (D) received 48 percent of the vote in a primary contest in October 2008, requiring him to face the next higher vote recipient, Willie Banks (D) on Nov. 4. Camouche won this contest with 62 percent of the vote, allowing him to proceed to a final election on Dec. 6, 2008. The votes in the table are for the Dec. 6, 2008, voting.

7. Two special elections were held May 3, 2008, to fill unexpired terms in Louisiana. One was in the First District to replace Bobby Jindal (R), who resigned after being elected state governor on Oct. 20, 2007. The other was in the Sixth District to replace Richard H. Baker (R), who resigned Feb. 2, 2008, to take a lobbying position with a trade group for the hedge fund industry.

8. Donna Edwards (D) defeated incumbent Albert Wynn in a Feb. 12, 2008, Democratic primary for the November election. Wynn then resigned his seat, effective at the end of May, to join a law and lobbying firm. Edwards later won a special June 17 election to fill out his term in the 110th Congress. The votes in the table are for that election.

9. A special election was held May 13, 2008, to fill the unexpired term of Roger Wicker (R), who resigned Dec. 31, 2007, on appointment to fill a vacant Senate seat created by the resignation of Trent Lott (R) on Dec. 18, 2007.

10. A special election was held Nov. 18, 2008, to fill the unexpired term of Stephanie Tubbs Jones (D), who died Aug. 20, 2008.

Senate Elections

THE CREATION OF THE U.S. SENATE was a result of the so-called “great compromise” at the Constitutional Convention in 1787. The small states wanted equal representation in Congress, fearing domination by the larger states under a population formula. The larger states, however, naturally wished for a legislature based on population, where their strength would prevail.

In resolving this dispute, delegates simply split the basis for representation between the two houses: population for the House of Representatives; equal representation by state for the Senate. By the terms of the compromise, each state was entitled to two senators. In a sense, they were conceived to be ambassadors from the states, representing the sovereign interests of the states to the federal government.

ELECTION BY STATE LEGISLATURES

To elect these “ambassadors,” the Founders chose the state legislatures instead of the people themselves. The argument was that legislatures would be able to give more sober and reflective thought than the people at large to the kind of persons needed to represent the states’ interests to the federal government. The delegates also thought the state legislatures and thus the states would take a greater interest in the fledgling national government if they were involved in its operations this way. Furthermore, the state legislatures had chosen the members of the Continental Congress (the Congress under the Articles of Confederation), as well as the members of the Constitutional Convention itself, so the procedure was familiar to the delegates.

In choosing the state legislatures as the instruments of election for senators, the Constitutional Convention considered and abandoned several alternatives. Some delegates had suggested that the senators be elected by the House or appointed by the president from a list of nominees selected by the state legislatures. These ideas were discarded as making the Senate too dependent on another part of the federal government. Popular election was rejected as being too radical and inconvenient. Also turned down was a scheme for a system of electors, similar to presidential electors, to choose the senators in each state.

So deeply entrenched was the ambassadorial aspect of a senator’s duty that state legislatures sometimes attempted to instruct senators on how to vote. This occasionally raised severe problems of conscience among senators and resulted in several resignations.

For example, in 1836 future president John Tyler was serving as a U.S. senator from Virginia. That year his state legislature instructed him to vote for a resolution to expunge the Senate censure of President Andrew Jackson for his removal of the federal deposits from the Bank of the United States. Tyler, who had voted for the censure resolution, resigned from the Senate rather than comply. In another instance, Sen. Hugh L. White of Tennessee, a Whig, resigned from the Senate in 1840 after being instructed by his state legislature to vote for the subtreasury bill, an economic measure supported by the Democratic Van Buren administration.

Another problem for the Founders was the length of the senatorial term. The framers of the Constitution tried to balance two principles: the belief that relatively frequent elections were necessary to promote good behavior and the need for steadiness and continuity in government.

Delegates proposed terms of three, four, five, six, seven, and nine years. They finally settled on six-year staggered terms, with one-third of the members coming up for election every two years. (See “Sessions and Terms,” p. 1393.)

CHANGING ELECTION PROCEDURES

At first each state made separate arrangements for its state legislature to elect the senators. Many states required an election by the two chambers of the legislature sitting separately. That is, each chamber had to vote for the same candidate for him to be elected. Other states, however, provided for election by a joint ballot of the two chambers sitting together.

However, the Constitution specifically authorized Congress to regulate senatorial elections if it so chose. Article I, section 4, paragraph 1 states, “The times, places and

SENATE APPOINTMENTS AND SPECIAL ELECTIONS

Governors were given specific authority in the Constitution to make temporary appointments to the Senate. Article I, section 3, paragraph 2 states: "If vacancies happen by resignation, or otherwise, during the recess of the legislature of any state, the executive thereof may make temporary appointments until the next meeting of the legislature, which shall then fill such vacancies."

The principle was established as early as 1794 that a vacancy created solely because a state legislature had failed to elect a new senator could not be filled by appointment because the vacancy had not occurred "during the recess of the legislature." For example, the term of Sen. Matthew Quay, R-Pa. (1887–1899, 1901–1904) expired March 3, 1899. The legislature was in session but had not reelected him. Nor did it elect anyone before adjourning that April 20. Thereupon, the governor appointed Quay to the vacancy; but the Senate did not allow Quay to take the seat because the vacancy had occurred during the meeting of the legislature. In 1901 the legislature elected Quay for the remainder of the term.

On the other hand, if a senator's term expired and the legislature was not in session, a governor was able to make an appointment—but only until the legislature either elected a successor or adjourned without electing one. For example, on March 3, 1809, the term of Sen. Samuel Smith, D-R-Md. (1803–1815, 1822–1833) expired. The legislature was not then in session and had not elected a successor. Therefore, the governor appointed Smith to fill the vacancy until the next meeting of the legislature, which was scheduled for June 5, 1809. The Senate ruled that he was entitled to the seat. During the subsequent meeting of the state legislature that year, Smith was elected to a full term.

Whatever the condition under which an appointment had been made, it was to last only through the next state legislative session. Even if a legislature failed to elect a new senator, the appointed senator's service was to expire with the adjournment of the state legislature.

This principle was confirmed in the case of Sen. Samuel Phelps, Whig-Vt. (1839–1851, 1853–1854). Phelps was appointed in January 1853 to a vacancy caused by the death of Sen. William Upham, Whig-Vt. (1843–1853), whose term was to run through March 3, 1855. As the legislature was in recess, Phelps continued to serve until the expiration of the Thirty-second Congress on March 3, 1853, and also during a special session of the Thirty-third Congress in March and April 1853. The Vermont Legislature met during October and December without electing a senator to fill the unexpired term. Phelps then showed up for the regular session of the Thirty-third Congress in December, but the Senate in March 1854 decided he was not entitled to retain his seat because the legislature had met and adjourned without electing a new senator.

17TH AMENDMENT AND SPECIAL ELECTIONS

The adoption of the Seventeenth Amendment in 1913, providing for popular election of senators, altered the provision for gubernatorial appointment of senators to fill vacancies. The amendment provided that, in case of a vacancy, "the executive authority of such state shall issue writs of election to fill such vacancies: Provided, that the legislature of any state may empower the executive thereof to make temporary appointments until the people fill the vacancies by election as the legislature may direct." Under this provision, state legislatures allowed governors to make temporary appointments until the vacancy could be filled by a special election. Special elections—elections held to fill unexpired terms—were usually held in November of an even-numbered year. Some states, however, provided for special elections to be held within just a few months after the vacancy occurred.

Before ratification of the Seventeenth Amendment, the term of an appointee generally ended when a successor was elected to fill the unexpired term or at the end of the six-year term, whichever occurred first. After the ratification of the Seventeenth Amendment but before ratification of the Twentieth Amendment in 1933, senators who were elected to fill lengthy unexpired terms usually could take office immediately, displacing an appointee. If an appointee was serving near the close of a six-year term, most states would hold simultaneous elections to fill both the six-year term beginning in March of the following year and the four-month period beginning immediately after the election in November to the following March. Sometimes different persons would be elected to each term.

To eliminate the "lame-duck" congressional sessions that ran from December of an even-numbered year through March 3 of the next year, the Twentieth Amendment changed the March 3 beginning date of the terms for Congress to January 3. After the so-called lame-duck amendment took effect, senators elected to fill vacancies in terms that had several years to run would take office manner of holding elections for Senators and Representatives shall be prescribed in each state by the legislature thereof; but the Congress may at any time by law make or alter such regulations, except as to the place of choosing Senators."

1866 Act of Congress

In 1866 Congress decided to exercise its authority. Procedures in some states, particularly those requiring concurrent majorities in both houses of the state legislature for election to the Senate, had resulted in numerous delays and vacancies. The new federal law set up the following procedure: the first ballot for senator was to be taken by the two chambers of each state legislature voting separately. If no candidate received a majority of the vote in both houses, then the two chambers were to meet and ballot jointly until a majority choice emerged.

Also included in the 1866 law were provisions for roll-call votes in the state legislatures (secret ballots had been taken in several states) and for a definite timetable. The law directed that the first vote take place on the second Tuesday after the meeting and organization of the legislature, followed by a minimum of a single ballot on every legislative day thereafter until election of a senator resulted.

But the new uniform system did not have the desired effect. The requirement for a majority vote continued the frequency of deadlocks. In fact one of the worst deadlocks in senatorial election history happened under the 1866 federal law.

immediately, as before, but, if a vacancy occurred near the end of a six-year term, an appointee would often serve until the January 3 expiration date, eliminating the necessity for a special election.

Since passage of the Twentieth Amendment, however, some states have held elections in November for the remaining two months of a term. Georgia voters in 1972, for example, found on the ballot two Senate elections, one for a six-year term and one for a two-month term to fill the unexpired term of Sen. Richard B. Russell (1933–1971), who died in office.

APPOINTMENTS BECOME CONTROVERSIAL

The power of governors to fill vacant Senate seats generated increasing controversy in 2009 following the appointment of four senators to fill vacancies that resulted from the 2008 elections. The initial event was the election of Illinois senator Barack Obama as president and Joseph R. Biden Jr. as vice president. Obama resigned his seat on November 16, 2008, and Biden his on January 15, 2009. Obama named two sitting senators to his cabinet: Hillary Rodham Clinton of New York as secretary of state, and Ken Salazar of Colorado as secretary of the interior. Clinton and Salazar both resigned January 21, 2009. This presented four seats for governors to fill, three of which proved controversial and reignited calls for a constitutional amendment requiring that vacancies be filled by elections.

The most controversial pick involved filling Obama's Illinois seat, which fell to that state's governor, Rod Blagojevich, a Democrat. However, federal prosecutors in December 2008 arrested Blagojevich, alleging, among other charges, that he was soliciting money or other favors in exchange for filling the Senate seat. Senate leaders threatened to refuse to seat any person Blagojevich selected because such an appointment would be viewed as tainted. Nevertheless, the governor on December 31 named former Illinois attorney general Roland W. Burris to the seat. Senate leaders, amid uncertainty about whether they had the legal power to block the appointment, reluctantly agreed to seat Burris in mid-January. At the time of his appointment, Burris had not been associated with the scandal, but in early 2009 released taped telephone calls between Burris and Blagojevich aides suggested Burris may have offered to raise campaign funds for the governor. Burris's comments were subject to different interpretations and he denied he ever linked fund-raising to his bid for an appointment. Nevertheless, Burris faced renewed calls for his resignation along with the start of a Senate ethics probe into the matter.

In New York, Gov. David Paterson took two months before naming Democrat Kirsten Gillibrand, a two-term representative from upstate, to Clinton's seat. Initially, Caroline Kennedy, the daughter of President John F. Kennedy, said she was interested in the Senate, but she soon ran into criticism for her lack of experience (she had never run for office) and unspecific views on various issues. Critics also suggested a whiff of entitlement in her pursuit of the job. She withdrew her name before Paterson tapped Gillibrand.

In Delaware, the governor appointed to the open seat a long-time aid to Biden, Edward E. Kaufman. Critics suggested that Kaufman was a seat-warmer until Biden's son, Beau Biden, who was serving in Iraq, could return to run for the office in 2010. Kaufman later announced that he would not seek a full term.

The single non-controversial appointment was the Colorado Democratic governor's appointment of Salazar's replacement, Michael Bennett, the well-regarded Denver public schools superintendent. The issue arose again in August when the Republican Florida governor appointed a replacement for Sen. Mel Martinez, who resigned to return to private life. (See box, Appointed Senators After 1913, p. 1394)

DATES OF SERVICE

Title II, Section 36 of the U.S. Code sets the dates on which senators appointed or elected to fill unexpired terms formally begin service and go on the payroll. The service of an appointee commences the day of appointment and continues until a successor is elected and qualified. If the Senate is in sine die adjournment when a new senator is elected to succeed an appointee, he will take office and begin receiving his salary on the day after the election.

If the Senate is in session when a new senator is elected to succeed an appointee, the new senator may take office when he or she goes before the Senate to take the oath; the appointee may continue in office until this occurs or the Senate adjourns sine die, whichever happens first. The term of the newly elected senator would then begin the day following the sine die adjournment, at which time the new member would begin receiving his or her Senate salary.

The case occurred in Delaware at the end of the nineteenth century. In 1899, with the legislature divided between two factions of the Republican Party and the Democrats in the minority, no majority selection could be made for the senatorial term beginning March 4, 1899. So bitter was the Republican factional dispute that neither side would support a candidate acceptable to the other; nor would the Democrats play kingmaker by siding with one or the other Republican group. The dispute continued throughout the life of the Fifty-sixth Congress (1899–1901), leaving a seat unfilled.

Furthermore, the term of Delaware's other Senate seat ended in 1901, necessitating another election. The same pattern continued, with the legislature unable to fill either seat, leaving Delaware totally unrepresented in the Senate from March 4, 1901, until March 1, 1903, when two senators were finally elected in the closing days of the Fifty-seventh Congress (1901–1903). The deadlock was broken when the two Republican factions split the state's two seats between them.

Abuses of Election by Legislatures

Besides the frequent deadlocks, critics pointed to what they saw as other faults in the system. They charged that the party caucuses in the state legislatures, as well as individual members, were subject to intense and unethical lobbying practices by supporters of various senatorial candidates. The relatively small size of the electing body and the high stakes involved—a seat in the Senate—often tempted the use of questionable methods in conducting the elections.

Before 1913 senators were selected by the legislatures of each state. Public disapproval of the role of party bosses and vested interests in this selection process ultimately led to the passage of the Seventeenth Amendment, which mandated direct election of senators.

Allegations that such methods were used involved the Senate itself in election disputes. The Constitution makes Congress the judge of its own members. Article I, section 5, paragraph 1 states, “Each House shall be the judge of the elections, returns and qualifications of its own members...”

One of the most sensational cases concerned the election of William Lorimer, R-Ill. Lorimer won on the ninety-ninth ballot taken by the Illinois Legislature in 1909. A year after he had taken his seat, the Senate cleared Lorimer of charges that he had won election by bribery. But the revelation of new evidence prompted another investigation, and in 1912 the Senate voted that Lorimer’s election was invalid and that he was not entitled to his seat.

Critics had still another grievance against the legislative method of choosing senators. They contended that elections to the state legislatures were often overshadowed by senatorial contests. Thus when voters went to the polls to choose their state legislators, they sometimes would be urged to disregard state and local issues and vote for a legislator who promised to support a certain candidate for the U.S. Senate. This, the critics said, led to neglect of state government and issues. Moreover, drawn-out Senate contests tended to hold up the consideration of state business.

DEMANDS FOR POPULAR ELECTIONS

But the main criticism of legislative elections was that they distorted or even blocked the will of the people. Throughout the nineteenth century, the movement toward popular election had taken away from the legislatures the right to elect presidential electors in states that had such provisions. Now attention focused on the Senate.

Five times around the turn of the century the House passed constitutional amendments to provide for Senate elections by popular vote—in the Fifty-second Congress on January 16, 1893; in the Fifty-third Congress on July 21, 1894; in the Fifty-fifth Congress on May 11, 1898; in the Fifty-sixth Congress on April 13, 1900; and in the Fifty-seventh Congress on February 13, 1902. But each time the Senate refused to act.

Frustrated in their desire for direct popular elections, reformers began implementing various formulas for preselecting Senate candidates, attempting to reduce the legislative balloting to something approaching a mere formality. In some cases party conventions endorsed nominees for the Senate, allowing the voters at least to know who the members of the legislature were likely to support. Southern states early in the century adopted the party primary to choose Senate nominees. However, legislators never could be legally bound to support anyone because the Constitution gave them the unfettered power of electing to the Senate whomever they chose.

Oregon took the lead in instituting nonbinding popular elections. Under a 1901 law, voters expressed their choice for senator in popular ballots. While the election results had no legal force, the law required that the popular returns be formally announced to the state legislature before it elected a senator.

At first the law did not work—the winner of the informal popular vote in 1902 was not chosen senator by the legislature. But the reformers increased their pressure, demanding that candidates for the legislature sign a pledge to vote for the winner of the popular vote. By 1908 the plan was successful. The Republican legislature elected to the Senate Democrat George Chamberlain, the winner of the popular contest. Several other states—including Colorado, Kansas, Minnesota, Montana, Nevada, and Oklahoma—adopted the Oregon method.

The Seventeenth Amendment

of the Senate to act, proponents of change began pushing for a convention to propose this and perhaps other amendments to the Constitution. (Article V of the Constitution provides two methods of proposing amendments—either passage by two-thirds of both houses of Congress or through the calling of a special convention if requested by the legislatures of two-thirds of the states. In either case any amendment proposed by Congress or by a special convention must be ratified by three-fourths of the states.)

Conservatives began to fear a convention more than they did popular election of senators. There was no precedent for an amending convention and conservatives worried that it might be dominated by liberals and progressives who would propose numerous amendments and change the very nature of the government. Consequently, their opposition to popular election of senators diminished.

At the same time progressives of both parties made strong gains in the midterm elections of 1910. Some successful Senate candidates had made pledges to work for adoption of a constitutional amendment providing for popular election. In this atmosphere the Senate debated and finally passed the amendment on June 12, 1911, by a vote of 64–24. The House concurred in the Senate version on May 13, 1912, by a vote of 238–39. Ratification of the Seventeenth Amendment was completed by the requisite number of states on April 8, 1913, and was proclaimed a part of the Constitution by Secretary of State William Jennings Bryan on May 31, 1913.

The first popularly elected senator was chosen in a special election in November 1913. He was Sen. Blair Lee, D-Md. (1914–1917), elected for the remaining three years of the unexpired term of Democratic senator Isidor Rayner (1905–1912), who had died in office. Roughly 185,000 votes were cast in the special election, less than 50,000 fewer than the number who turned out for the regularly scheduled presidential election in Maryland the previous year.

There was no wholesale changeover in membership when the Seventeenth Amendment became effective. In fact all twenty-three senators elected by state legislatures for their previous terms, and running for reelection to full terms in November 1914, were successfully reelected. Seven others had retired or died, and two had been defeated for renomination.

The changeover in method of electing senators ended the frequent legislative stalemates in choosing members of the Senate. Otherwise many things remained the same. There were still election disputes, including charges of corruption, as well as miscounting of votes.

Election Disputes

Election disputes continued to occupy the Senate. A bitter contest for a New Hampshire Senate seat in 1974 between Republican representative Louis C. Wyman and Democrat John A. Durkin wound up in the Senate after a seesaw battle between New Hampshire authorities over who had won. The state Ballot Law Commission had finally awarded the victory to Wyman by two votes, but Durkin took his case to the Democratic-controlled Senate. After wrestling with the problem for seven months, the Senate gave up and declared the seat vacant. A new election was held September 16, 1975, which Durkin won decisively. Another epic election dispute came in 2009 in Minnesota in a race that took almost eight months to resolve. (See “The Modern Senate,” p. 1396.)

SENATE’S THREE CLASSES

The Senate is divided into three classes or groups of members. A member’s class depends on the year in which he or she is elected. Article I, section 3, paragraph 2 of the Constitution, relating to the classification of senators in the first and succeeding Congresses, provides that “Immediately after they shall be assembled in consequence of the first election, they shall be divided as equally as may be into three classes. The seats of the Senators of the first class shall be vacated at the expiration of the second year, of the second class at the expiration of the fourth year and of the third class at the expiration of the sixth year, so that one-third may be chosen every second year...”

Thus senators belonging to class one began their regular terms in the years 1789, 1791, 1797, 1803, etc., continuing through the present day to 1995, 2001, 2007, and were to be up for reelection in 2012 for the Congress to begin in 2013. Senators belonging to class two began their regular terms in 1789, 1793, 1799, 1805, etc., continuing through to the present day in 1997, 2003, 2009, and were to be up for reelection in 2014 for the Congress beginning in 2015. Senators belonging to class three began their regular terms in 1789, 1795, 1801, 1807, etc., continuing through the present day to 1993, 1999, 2005, and coming up for reelection in 2010.

SESSIONS AND TERMS

In fall 1788 the expiring Continental Congress established a schedule for the incoming government under the new Constitution. The Congress decided that the new government was to commence on the first Wednesday in March 1789—March 4. Even though the House did not achieve a quorum until April 1 and the Senate April 6, and President George Washington was not inaugurated until April 30, Senate, House, and presidential terms were still considered to have begun March 4. The term of the first Congress continued through March 3, 1791. Because congressional and presidential terms were fixed at exactly two, four, and six years, March 4 became the official date of transition from one administration to another every four years and from one Congress to another every two years.

APPOINTED SENATORS AFTER 1913

Controversial appointments to fill Senate vacancies in 2009 brought new demands for a constitutional amendment to require popular elections to fill open seats. Two open seats occurred from the 2008 election of Illinois senator Barack Obama as president and Delaware senator Joseph R. Biden Jr. as vice president. Obama subsequently named two other senators to his cabinet. As was the well-established procedure for decades, these four vacancies were filled by appointments by their states' governors, but three were controversial and all were criticized as undemocratic. (See box, Senate Appointments and Special Elections, p. 1390.)

Between 1913, when direct election of senators began after ratification of the Seventeenth Amendment to the Constitution, and August 2009, 185 persons were appointed to fill Senate vacancies. Many did not continue in office after their appointments ended. Of the 180 appointments prior to the four connected with Obama's election, according to the Senate Historical Office, 116 tried to keep the seat in the next general election. Of those 116, only sixty, 52 percent, were successful; thirty-six, 20 percent, lost in the general election; and twenty, 11 percent, did not get the party nomination. Sixty-three appointees did not seek reelection and one died during his appointment.

Of the appointed senators who successfully sought election, many stayed on for decades, attesting again to the power of incumbency. Through seniority, many appointees rose to significant power in the Senate, usually as committee chairs. The list includes appointed senators who subsequently won reelection, except for the last five who would face voters after 2009. Dates of service are shown. In most cases the beginning service date is the appointment date, but some appointees were sworn in later. Those differences are listed.

NOTE: Two appointed senators did not immediately return to office by election but subsequently were voted into office. James Eastland, D-Miss., filled a vacancy on June 30, 1941. He did not seek election then, but was elected in 1942. Howard M. Metzenbaum, D-Ohio, was appointed on Jan. 4, 1974, but lost the nomination to fill the vacant seat. He was elected in 1976.

1. McNary was appointed senator in 1917 but did not seek reelection. Appointed again on Dec. 12, 1918, effective Dec. 18, he served until his death in 1944.

2. Glass was Treasury secretary 1918 to 1920 in President Woodrow Wilson's administration. Appointed to a Senate vacancy in 1919 and elected to that position on Nov. 3, 1920, he did not qualify until Feb. 2, 1920, preferring to remain in Wilson's cabinet.

3. Dworshak served previously from Nov. 6, 1946, to Jan. 3, 1949.

'Long' and 'Short' Sessions

The Constitution did not mandate a regular congressional session to begin March 4. Instead, Article I, section 4, paragraph 2 called for at least one congressional session every year, to convene on the first Monday in December unless Congress by law set a different day. Consequently, except when called by the president for special sessions, or when Congress itself set a different day, Congress convened in regular session each December, until the passage of the Twentieth Amendment in 1933.

The December date resulted in a long and short session. The first (long) session would meet in December of an odd-numbered year and continue into the next year, usually adjourning some time the next summer. The second (short) session began in December of an even-numbered year and continued through March 3 of the next year, when its term ran out. It also became customary for the Senate to meet in brief special session on March 4 or March 5, especially in years when a new president was inaugurated, to act on presidential nominations.

To illustrate with an example of a typical Congress, the Twenty-ninth (1845–1847): President James K. Polk, a Democrat, was inaugurated on March 4, 1845. The Senate met in special session from March 4 to March 20 to confirm Polk's cabinet and other appointments. Then the first regular session convened December 1, 1845, working until August 10, 1846, when it adjourned. The second, a short session, lasted from December 7, 1846, through March 3, 1847.

Since it was not clear whether terms of members of Congress ended at midnight March 3 or noon March 4, the custom evolved of extending the legislative day of March 3, in odd-numbered years, to noon March 4.

The Twentieth Amendment

The political consequence of the short session was to encourage filibusters and other delaying tactics by members determined to block legislation that would die upon the automatic adjournment of Congress on March 3. Moreover, the Congresses that met in short session always included a substantial number of "lame-duck" members who had been defeated at the polls, yet were able quite often to determine the legislative outcome of the session.

Dissatisfaction with the short session began to mount after 1900. During the administration of President Woodrow Wilson (1913–1921), each of four such sessions ended with a Senate filibuster and the loss of important bills, including several funding bills. Sen. George W. Norris, R-Neb. (1913–1943), became the leading advocate of a constitutional amendment to abolish the short session by starting the terms of Congress and the president in January instead of March. The Senate approved the Norris amendment five times during the 1920s, only to see it blocked in the House each time. It was finally approved by both chambers in 1932 and became the Twentieth Amendment upon ratification by the thirty-sixth state in 1933.

The amendment provided that the terms of senators and representatives would begin and end at noon on the third day of January of the year following the election. However, according to the Senate Manual (2000 edition, p. 997), "In view of the impracticality of dealing with split days,... it has been the long established practice for payment of salaries, computation of allowances and recording of service to credit a Member for the full day of the third of January he takes office and consider his term as ended at the close of business on the second of January six years later." In the list of senators in this volume in Chapter 25, dates of service are shown as beginning on January 3 and ending on January 3.

The Twentieth Amendment also established noon January 20 as the day on which the president and vice president take office. It provided also that Congress should meet annually on January 3, "unless they shall by law appoint a different day." The second session of the Seventy-third Congress was the first to convene on the new date, January 3, 1934. Franklin D. Roosevelt was the first president and John N. Garner the first vice president to be inaugurated on January 20, at the start of their second terms in 1937.

The amendment was intended to permit Congress to extend its first session for as long as necessary and to complete the work of its second session before the next election, thereby obviating legislation by a lame-duck body.

THE MODERN SENATE

The Senate is often called the nation's most exclusive club, even though the House of Representatives has equal power. One reason for the Senate's greater prestige is its smaller size. Out of a nation of more than 280 million (as of the 2000 census), only 100 men and women are senators at any one time compared with 435 representatives. A state's two senators each represent the entire state, while all but the least populated states are carved into multiple House districts. As a result of the Senate's size and an individual's greater opportunity to affect legislation, there is often intense competition and there are hefty expenditures to capture a seat.

In the 2000 congressional elections, former Wall Street financier Jon Corzine set a record for a Senate race by spending more than $60 million to win his contest in New Jersey. Nearly all of the money came out of Corzine's pocket. In neighboring New York, First Lady Hillary Rodham Clinton, a Democrat, and Republican Rep. Rick A. Lazio combined to spend roughly $70 million in a race that Clinton won. In 2004 the Senate candidates in South Dakota—Democratic incumbent Tom Daschle and Republican John Thune—combined to spend nearly $35 million in a state with less than 5 percent of the population of New York.

In November 2008 Senate Majority Leader Harry Reid of Nevada stands on Capitol Hill with the following newly-elected Democratic senators: Jeanne Shaheen, D-N.H., Jeff Merkley, D-Ore., Tom Udall, D-N.M., Mark Warner, D-Va., Kay Hagan, D-N.C., and Mark Udall, D-Colo.

Four years later, the Senate race in Minnesota was the most expensive in the country, with Republican incumbent Norm Coleman and Democratic challenger Al Franken spending a combined $50 million in a remarkably close race that was not settled until June 30, 2009. In the November 2008 voting, in which 2.9 million ballots were cast, the difference between the two candidates was barely 200 votes. A statewide hand recount of ballots in 2009 gave Franken a lead of 312 votes. Coleman disputed the outcome in legal action, contending that some ballots were improperly excluded in the recount. His challenge eventually reached the Minnesota supreme court, which on June 30 ruled unanimously, 5–0, that Franken had won the contest by that vote margin. Coleman conceded later that day and the Minnesota governor quickly signed the election certificate for Franken. News reports said the total recount bill came to more than $11 million.

Altogether, in 2008, nine Senate candidates ran campaigns that cost more than $10 million. Six of these candidates won, three lost. Those numbers underscore the fact that senators tend to be more vulnerable at the ballot box than House members. Thirty incumbent senators ran for reelection in 2008. Five of those were defeated, meaning that incumbents had a reelection rate of 83.3 percent. In 2006 Senate incumbents had a reelection rate of 79 percent. In contrast, the reelection rate for House incumbents was 95 percent in 2008 and 94 percent in 2006. In 2008 Mitch McConnell, the Republican Senate minority leader, won a heated contest by a margin of just 6 percent. Four years earlier, Daschle, the Democratic Senate minority leader, narrowly lost.

That disparity between the reelection rates in each chamber is not unusual. In more than half of the elections from 1968 through 2008, at least 95 percent of all House incumbents seeking reelection were victorious. But in that same time period, the Senate reelection rate topped 95 percent in just two elections (1990 and 2004) and it often fell below 75 percent. The latter was the case particularly in the volatile period from 1968 through 1980, when the political waters were roiled by the Vietnam War, Watergate, and the Iran hostage crisis.

In just more than a quarter century, from 1980 to 2008, partisan control of the Senate changed six times. In 1980 the strong showing of Republican presidential candidate Ronald Reagan helped the GOP pick up a net of twelve Senate seats and wrest control of the upper chamber from the Democrats for the first time in twenty-six years. But in the midterm election of 1986, without Reagan on the ballot, Democrats regained control, picking up a net of eight seats and ousting many of the Senate freshmen who had been elected with Reagan's help six years earlier.

In 1994 the tide turned again in favor of the Republicans, as they picked up a net of nine seats (including the switch of Democratic incumbent Richard C. Shelby to the GOP the day after the election). Unlike the GOP's success in 1980, though, which was basically nationwide, the party's Senate gains in 1994 and the decade that followed were largely concentrated in the South. In fact, without their advantage in the South, Republicans would not have held either chamber.

Republicans were able to maintain a clear-cut majority in the Senate from 1994 until the end of the century. But in the election of 2000, Democrats gained a net of four seats to produce a 50–50 tie. It was the first partisan deadlock in the Senate since the election of 1880 and created several unusual situations. Since the 107th Congress convened on January 3, 2001, when there was still a Democratic vice president (Al Gore) to cast the tie-breaking vote, Democrats were in nominal control of the Senate for the first seventeen days. When the new GOP administration was sworn in January 20, and Republican vice president Dick Cheney took his seat as the presiding officer who could cast a tie-breaking vote if necessary, Senate Republicans regained the upper hand. Yet with such a tenuous advantage, they entered into a unique power-sharing arrangement with the Democrats, which resulted in the two parties evenly dividing membership on committees as well as agreeing to committee staffs and budgets of equal size. Republicans, though, chaired the committees.

This unusual situation lasted less than half the year. In June 2001 a Republican moderate, Sen. James Jeffords of Vermont, decided to leave the Republican Party, become an independent, and to caucus with the Democrats. Jeffords said he was no longer comfortable with the GOP's increasingly conservative stand on many issues, and his switch gave the Democrats a 51–49 margin that allowed them to organize the chamber, including taking over the chairs of committees and setting the legislative agenda.

Republicans regained control of the Senate by a 51–49 margin in the midterm elections of 2002, the first time the president's party won back the upper chamber in a midterm election since the popular election of senators was initiated in 1913. Republicans were able to expand their advantage in 2004, capturing five open Democratic Senate seats in the South that helped push their Senate majority to fifty-five seats.

But the Democrats returned to power in 2006 and 2008. The Democratic pickups in those years took place in every region of the country, including the South, where in 2008 Democrats defeated Republican incumbents in Virginia and North Carolina. The Democratic comeback started in 2006, when the defeat of six Republican incumbents produced a 49–49 tie in the Senate and enabled the Democrats, with the support of two independents, to establish a thin working majority of 51–49.

On April 28, 2009, Arlen Specter of Pennsylvania switched parties. With two independent senators caucusing with the Democrats, this boosted the total on the democratic side to fifty-nine. When Al Franken was sworn in as the newly-elected Democratic senator from Minnesota on July 7, 2009, the total reached sixty, the number of votes needed to halt a filibuster.

Two years later, with the economy sinking and voters rallying to Democratic presidential candidate Barack Obama, the Democrats ousted five more Republican incumbents and picked up three open seats. With the continued support of two independents, Democrats had a working majority of 58–41, with the Minnesota contest unresolved as the 111th Congress got underway. That number expanded to fifty-nine Democrats to forty Republicans on April 28, 2009, when Arlen Specter of Pennsylvania switched from the GOP to become a Democrat. His defection was especially important because the Democrats were one away from sixty votes—the number a majority party needs to halt filibusters being conducted by the minority. The Democratic number reached sixty when Franken was declared the Minnesota winner on June 30, 2009. Observers noted, however, that the theoretical filibuster-proof majority might be illusory because senators are notoriously independent and because two senior Democrats—Edward M. Kennedy, Mass., and Robert C. Byrd, W. Va.—were often absent because of health reasons; Kennedy died Aug. 25, 2009, from brain cancer.

Arlen Specter's party switch did not come as a complete surprise to Senate observers. Up until 1965, Specter was a Democrat, and while he had been in the Senate since 1981 as a Republican, he faced a difficult primary challenge for reelection in 2010, a race that many analysts thought he would lose to a conservative challenger. Specter candidly said he was switching because he doubted he could win a primary dominated by conservative Republican voters in Pennsylvania. He also noted that the Republican Party had moved away from his long-held moderate, and sometimes liberal, beliefs. When still a Republican, Specter had a reputation as a fiercely independent member of the GOP caucus who often went against Republican leaders. On switching he warned he would not be an automatic sixtieth vote for the Democrats.

Throughout its history, the Senate has been an almost exclusive preserve of white males. But the chamber has been slowly evolving to better reflect the diverse demographic face of America. In 2004 two Hispanic senators were elected after three decades without any Hispanics in the chamber, and Barack Obama was only the third African American senator elected since Reconstruction. Meanwhile, the number of women senators, never more than two at the same time until 1993, had risen to seventeen by the start of the 111th Congress in 2009. Also that year, both senators from California, Maine, and Washington were women.

U.S. Senators, 1789–2009

THIS CHAPTER contains a listing of United States senators who served from March 4, 1789, through September 10, 2009—from the First Congress to 111th Congress. Arranged alphabetically by state, the lists provide the name, political affiliation, and dates of service of each senator in chronological order within each class. (See “Senate’s Three Classes,” p. 1393.)

The primary source for the names, classes, and dates of service of senators is American Political Leaders, 1789–2005 (Washington, D.C.: CQ Press, 2005); America Votes 27 (Washington, D.C.: CQ Press, 2007); and America Votes 28 (Washington, D.C.: CQ Press, 2009).

Party Affiliation

Determinations of senators’ party affiliations were based on three sources. From 1913, when the Seventeenth Amendment established popular election of senators, to 1972 party designations were taken from the Inter-University Consortium for Political and Social Research (ICPSR) popular vote returns (see pp. 1434–1471). However, if a senator was elected in any one election with the support of more than one political party, only the major party is indicated in the listing. For example, Sen. Robert F. Kennedy of New York, who in 1964 was the nominee of both the Democratic and Liberal parties, appears as a Democrat (D).

Also from 1913 on, whenever senators switched parties during their period of service, each party is listed even if the senator was not formally elected as a nominee of the new party. For example, Sen. Wayne Morse of Oregon (1945–1969) is listed as a Republican, Independent, and Democrat (R, I, D). He was elected twice as a Republican in 1944 and 1950, left that party in 1952 and called himself an Independent until 1955, and then became a Democrat. He was reelected as a Democrat in 1956 and 1962. (See “Political Party Abbreviations,” p. 1772, in Reference Materials.)

For the period before popular election of senators (1789–1913), party affiliations were taken from the Biographical Directory of the American Congress, 1774–1996 and the Dictionary of American Biography, 20 volumes (New York: Scribner’s, 1928–1958). Because political parties did not formally exist in the early years of the Republic, classification of senators by party during this period can be difficult or misleading. In cases where party affiliation was not appropriate or could not be determined, no party designation appears.

Except where otherwise noted, senators were elected to office by state legislatures or, after ratification of the Seventeenth Amendment in 1913, by popular vote.

Footnotes have been used to indicate the following circumstances:

- The appointment of a senator by the governor of his state to fill an unexpired term. In such cases the service of an appointee ended at the expiration of the six-year term, or when a new senator was elected, or after the recess of the state legislature. (See box, Senate Appointments and Special Elections, p. 1390.) In many cases, the appointee was elected to the Senate while serving there by appointment. In these cases, the footnote states that the senator was appointed and “subsequently elected.”
- The death or resignation of a senator before the expiration of the term for which he or she was elected or appointed. In a number of instances, retiring or defeated senators resigned shortly before the start of a new congressional session. This enabled the succeeding senator to take office early by appointment, thereby giving the person seniority over other newly elected senators. The practice has become less common in the modern era due to changes in seniority rules. Resignations are footnoted but subsequent appointments are not. However, the dates of service shown in the main listing account for the complete period served.
- The expulsion of a senator by the Senate, and certain cases of disputed elections. Information on these was obtained from Senate Election, Expulsion and Censure Cases (S Doc 92-7), a publication prepared in 1972 by the Senate Rules and Administration Committee.
- A change in political party affiliation by a senator, if it could be determined that the senator was elected or appointed as a member of one political party but was subsequently reelected as a nominee of a different party.

number of years prior to his election. Subsequently elected to fill the vacancy and, having in the interim met the constitutional requirement, took his seat Dec. 3, 1849.

14. Died Dec. 26, 1886.

15. Lorimer was accused of bribery and other corrupt practices in securing his election to the Senate. After lengthy investigation, the Senate voted on July 13, 1912, to declare his election invalid.

16. Died Dec. 7, 1926.

17. Smith was appointed by the governor Dec. 6, 1926, to fill the remaining three months of McKinley's term. He had previously been elected for a full six-year term. He was not permitted to take the oath for either term. The Committee on Privileges and Elections recommended on Jan. 17, 1928, that Smith not be allowed to take his seat because of fraud and corruption during the campaign. The Senate adopted this resolution Jan. 19, 1928, and the seat was declared vacant. According to the Biographical Directory, Smith "resigned Feb. 9, 1928," but since the seat was already vacant, this action was apparently meaningless.

18. Died Sept. 7, 1969.

19. Appointed by governor to fill vacancy.

20. Resigned Nov. 16, 2008, having been elected U.S. president.

21. Appointed by governor Dec. 31, 2008, to fill vacancy.

8. Appointed by governor to fill vacancy.
9. Elected to fill vacancy in term expiring March 3, 1925. Presented credentials for term expiring March 3, 1931, and was seated. Steck challenged Brookhart's right to the seat, alleging that ballots cast for Steck had either been rejected or counted for Brookhart, and that illegal votes had been cast for Brookhart. The Senate voted to unseat Brookhart and award the seat to Steck, who took the oath April 12, 1926, and served for the remainder of the term.
10. Successfully contested the election of Smith W. Brookhart.
11. Resigned Feb. 22, 1855.
12. Harlan was elected by the legislature for the term beginning March 4, 1855, and took his seat. The Senate voted Jan. 12, 1857, to deny him a seat, following protests that the legislature that elected him had not been properly constituted.
13. Elected to fill the vacancy caused by the Senate's having declared the seat vacant, and took his seat Jan. 29, 1857. Resigned May 15, 1865.

Senate General Election Returns, 1913–2008

SENATORIAL GENERAL ELECTION RETURNS for all fifty states are presented in this chapter. The major source for returns for the years 1913 through 1973 was the Inter-University Consortium for Political and Social Research (ICPSR) at the University of Michigan. The symbol # next to returns before 1974 indicates that CQ Press obtained the returns from a source other than the ICPSR. A complete set of other sources used appears on page 1472.

Prior to ratification of the Seventeenth Amendment, April 8, 1913, a number of states conducted nonbinding popular polls for Senate candidates, designed to guide the state legislatures in choosing between candidates. The ICPSR obtained some of the returns for these polls, and they are published within this chapter. (See “Demands for Popular Elections,” p. 1392.) While the complete source annotations for the ICPSR collection are too extensive to publish here, information on the sources for specific election returns can be obtained through the ICPSR. (See box, ICPSR Historical Election Returns File, p. xviii, Vol. I.)

For Senate elections from 1974 to 2008, the source was the America Votes series, compiled biennially and published by CQ Press. Richard M. Scammon and Alice V. McGillivray of the Elections Research Center, Washington, D.C., created the series first published in 1956. Since 1996 the series has been compiled by Rhodes Cook. Returns for the 1975 special election in New Hampshire were obtained from the New Hampshire secretary of state. A Senate Candidates Index is located on pages I-169 to I-179.

Presentation of Returns

The senate returns are arranged alphabetically by state and in chronological order by class of senator within each state listing. (See “Senate’s Three Classes,” p. 1393). The candidate receiving the largest number of popular votes is listed first with his or her vote total and percentage of the total vote cast, followed in descending order of votes received by all other candidates who received at least 5 percent of the total vote cast.

Special elections to fill vacancies are designated in the returns. (See box, Senate Appointments and Special Elections, p. 1390.)

When a state simultaneously held a special election to fill the remaining few months of an unexpired term and a general election for the next full six-year term, the special election is listed after the general election. For example, see page 1437 where the 1946 California general and special election returns appear.

Where a state had a special election and a general election for the same class in the same year, but not simultaneously, the elections appear in the order they occurred. For example, see page 1446 where the 1936 Louisiana special election, held in April, precedes the general election, held in November.

Vote Totals and Percentages

The ICPSR collection includes all candidates receiving popular votes. In the Guide to U.S. Elections, sixth edition, only Senate candidates receiving at least 5 percent of the total vote for that election are included. For example, in the ICPSR data collection for the 1944 New York senatorial election, 6,209,317 votes were cast, with Robert F. Wagner receiving 3,294,576 votes (53.05 percent), Thomas J. Curran receiving 2,899,497 votes (46.69 percent), and a third candidate, Eric Haas, receiving the remaining 15,244 votes (0.25 percent). The returns for the 1944 New York Senate election appear on page 1457. Returns for Haas are not listed because he received less than 5 percent of the total vote. The percentage listed for Wagner is 53.1 and for Curran is 46.7.

The procedure used throughout this section was to calculate percentages to two decimal places on the basis of the total number of votes cast in the election and round each percentage to one decimal place. Due to rounding and scattered votes for other candidates, percentages do not add to 100 percent.

Party Designations

In the ICPSR returns, the distinct—and in many cases, multiple—party designations appearing in the original sources are preserved. In many cases party labels represent combinations of multiparty support received by individual candidates. If, for example, on the ballot and official returns more than one party name was listed next to a candidate's name, then the party designation appearing in the election returns for that candidate will be a unique abbreviation for that combination of parties. (See "Political Party Abbreviations," p. 1772, in Reference Materials.)

In the special case of a candidate's name listed separately on the original ballot under more than one party—where returns were reported separately for each party—CQ Press has summed the votes recorded under the several parties and that figure appears as the candidate's total vote. Whenever separate party totals have been summed, a comma separates the abbreviations of the parties contributing the largest and second largest share of the total vote.

Most cases of this special situation occurred in New York and Pennsylvania during the twentieth century. For example, in the 1944 New York election cited above, Wagner's total vote of 3,294,576 was comprised of 2,485,735 as the Democratic Party nominee, 483,785 votes as American Labor Party candidate, and 325,056 votes as Liberal Party nominee. On page 1457, only Wagner's total vote of 3,294,576 appears. CQ Press has also included party abbreviations for the two parties that contributed the most votes to Wagner's total—separated by a comma. Thus, immediately following his name appear the abbreviations—D, AM LAB—indicating that Wagner was a candidate of at least two parties and that the largest number of votes he received was as a Democrat.

EXPLANATION OF SYMBOLS

In the returns for Senate elections symbols are used to denote special circumstances. In cases where no symbol is used, the candidate who received the most votes won the election to the Senate. The following is a key to the symbols used:

✓ Elected to the Senate, but the number of votes and the percentage of the total vote received by the winner are not available.

* The symbol is used in two kinds of situations: (1) When the winner of the election died before the term of office was to begin; (2) When the apparent winner was not permitted to take office. (For an explanation of specific cases, consult the appropriate state in the list of senators, pp. 1402–1431.)

Information was obtained from a source other than the Inter-University Consortium for Political and Social Research (ICPSR). (See “Senate Returns: Other Sources,” p. 1472.)

Georgia

1. Georgia law in 1992 required election by a majority of the popular vote and provided for a runoff between the two top finishers when neither gained a majority in the regular election. The majority-vote provision was changed before the 1996 election to require a 45 percent margin. The law was changed in 2003 to again require a majority of the popular vote for victory.

1. Dash ( — ) indicates candidate elected in primary. From 1978 to 2008 Louisiana held an open-primary election with candidates from all parties running on the same ballot. A candidate with a majority was elected; otherwise a runoff election followed in November between the two top finishers. This requirement was changed in 2008 to a plurality system similar to other states. See footnote 4, p. 1387. For Louisiana primary returns, see Chapter 27.				1936	Wallace H. Minnesota

1. In 2002 the Democratic incumbent, Paul Wellstone, was killed in an airplane crash in October. Walter F. Mondale was named to replace him on the general election ballot.

2. The outcome of the 2008 contest remained unresolved for nearly eight months. Incumbent Norm Coleman in state court challenged the accuracy of the recount that put challenger Al Franken ahead by 312 votes. The Minnesota supreme court ruled the recount was valid on June 30, 2009.

New Hampshire

1. Wyman's two-vote margin was challenged by Durkin. The Senate refused to seat either candidate. After seven months of fruitless efforts to decide a winner, the Senate voted July 30, 1975, to declare the seat vacant effective Aug. 8, 1975. In a special election Sept. 16, 1975, Durkin defeated Wyman.

Texas

1. Under Texas law passed after the 1957 special election, candidates in special elections for the Senate would all run together in a primary with party affiliation. If none received a majority of the vote in the first primary, a runoff would be held between the top two contenders.

Senate Primary Election Returns, 1920–2008

SENATORIAL PRIMARY RETURNS for all fifty states are presented in this chapter. For all nonsouthern states, primary returns go back to 1956; for eleven southern states (Alabama, Arkansas, Florida, Georgia, Louisiana, Mississippi, North Carolina, South Carolina, Tennessee, Texas, and Virginia), primary returns go back to 1920 where available. The vast majority of southern primaries during the period of 1920 to 1973 were held to nominate candidates of the dominant Democratic Party. In most cases, the winner of the Democratic primary went into the general election facing no Republican opponent and almost certain of victory.

The major source for primary election returns for all nonsouthern states from 1956 to 2008 is the America Votes series, created by Richard M. Scammon and Mary Scammon, at the Elections Research Center in Washington, D.C., and published biennially by CQ Press. The first volume was published in 1956. In later years Scammon, who died in 2001, was assisted by Alice V. McGillivray, who became the principal editor of the volume until her death in 1995. Since 1996 the series has been compiled under the direction of Rhodes Cook. Other sources include returns obtained by the political staff of Congressional Quarterly after each federal election from the state secretaries of state. In cases of discrepancies, CQ Press has accepted the America Votes figure. The first year for which America Votes reported primary returns, 1956, was chosen as the starting point for most states because senatorial primary votes for earlier years are not readily available.

For the eleven southern states the primary election returns presented for the years 1920 through 1973 were obtained, except where indicted by a footnote, from the Inter-University Consortium for Political and Social Research (ICPSR) at the University of Michigan. Major sources for returns since 1973 were the America Votes series and state secretaries of state.

Compilation of ICPSR Data File

Statewide candidate totals for southern primary elections for senator were prepared by the ICPSR staff from several sources. Election returns for the years prior to 1949 were obtained from Southern Primaries and Elections (University: University of Alabama Press, 1950), edited by Alexander Heard and Donald S. Strong. It should be noted that, although they transcribed their data from official returns, professors Heard and Strong found that many of the returns contained errors and discrepancies between the sum of county totals and the state total, or returns published as final in newspapers and secretary of state reports. No attempt was made by Heard and Strong to correct these discrepancies because the source of the error could not be determined.

For the period from 1949 to 1972, candidate totals were acquired from two sources. The first was a collection of southern primary electoral statistics prepared from official returns by Hugh Davis Graham, chairman, division of social sciences, University of Maryland (Baltimore County), and Numan V. Bartley, department of history, University of Georgia (Athens). In addition, reference was made to official returns supplied to ICPSR by the various secretaries of state in conjunction with the ICPSR effort to maintain its continuing collection of election materials. The returns obtained from Bartley and Graham, and the secretary of state offices, were compared with published reports of the election outcomes (notably state manuals and the America Votes series) to verify the completeness and accuracy of the returns.

Presentation of Returns

The returns for Senate primaries are arranged alphabetically by state and in chronological order by class of senator within each state listing. (See “Senate’s Three Classes,” p. 1393.) Candidates are listed in descending order, with the candidate receiving the greatest number of popular votes listed first. Percentage of the total vote is listed for each candidate who received at least 5 percent of the total vote cast.

Primaries for special elections to fill vacancies and runoff primaries are designated in the returns. For southern states prior to 1974, Republican primary results have been included, whenever available.

Names, Vote Totals, and Percentages

The names of senatorial primary candidates are listed as they appeared in the source materials. In a few cases, first names are not known. In some cases the full names of candidates (instead of shortened forms) have been used for consistency across elections.

For pre-1976 primary elections included in this section, the ICPSR computed statewide vote totals for each candidate. (See box, ICPSR Historical Election Returns File, p. xviii, Vol. I.) Percentages of the total vote were calculated on the basis of each candidate's proportion of the total number of votes cast for all candidates within each party's primary, including candidates receiving less than 5 percent of the vote who are not listed in the tables. Percentages have been calculated to two decimal places and rounded to one place. Due to rounding and the scattered votes of minor candidates, percentages in individual primary races may not add up to 100.

If no vote is shown for a candidate but the percentage of total vote is listed as 100 percent, in most cases the candidates in question ran unopposed and state election officials either did not bother to put the candidate's name on the ballot or simply did not make an effort to record the total number of votes.

When Senate primary elections were held under a preferential voting system and the use of second choice votes was required to determine a winner, the symbol ✓ appears next to the winner's name. (See "Preferential Primaries," p. 249, Vol. I.)

There were a number of unusual cases in the history of southern Senate primaries in which the nominee of one or both major parties was chosen by a party committee rather than in a primary. In these cases, the names of the nominees will appear in the primary returns along with a footnote indicating the particular circumstances. Where no primary is indicated for a year in which a state elected a senator, it generally means that party conventions chose the nominees. Notes at the end of a state's listing explain other unusual circumstances.

A Senate Primary Candidates Index is located on pages I-169 to I-192.

Alaska

1. In Alaska's so-called "jungle" primaries, all candidates for an office appeared together on the same ballot with their parties designated. Nominations went to the Republican and Democrat receiving the most votes for the office. Percentages were calculated here as if candidates had run in separate party primaries.

2. Alaska became a state Jan. 3, 1959. The first Senate elections for that state were for unspecified terms. The Senate later determined that Sen. Bartlett would serve two years (Class 2) and Sen. Gruening, four (Class 3).

3. A special election was held in 1970 to fill the remaining two years of the term of Sen. E. L. Bartlett (D), who died Dec. 11, 1968. The first two years of the vacancy were filled by appointee Ted Stevens (R).

4. In 1992 the Republican primary was a closed primary with only candidates from that party on the ballot. All other parties ran on a multiparty ballot with nominations going to the candidate with the highest vote in each party.

1. Robinson died July 14, 1937, a few months into his new six-year term. The state committee of the Democratic Party in Arkansas selected Gov. Carl E. Bailey as the Democratic nominee to run in an Oct. 19 special election; no Democratic primary was held. Bailey lost the special election to Rep. John E. Miller, a Democrat running as an Independent. (See p. 1436.)

2. Huckabee withdrew from the Senate race May 30 to become governor. The state Republican Party selected Rep. Tim Hutchinson as the Republican nominee to run in the general election.

California

1. California's cross-filing law permitted a candidate to enter both the Democratic and Republican primaries. The law was repealed after 1958.

2. A special election was held in 1992 to fill the remaining two years of the term of Sen. Pete Wilson (R), who resigned Jan. 7, 1991, after he was elected governor. The first two years of the vacancy were filled by appointee John Seymour (R).

3. In 1998 California instituted an open primary with all candidates running on a single, multiparty ballot with their parties designated. Nominations went to the candidate with the highest vote in each party. Percentages were calculated here as if candidates had run in separate party primaries.

Delaware

1. Data are given for the recount vote.

2. From 1972 through 1978 Delaware used a system of "challenge" primaries, in which a candidate for statewide office who received at least 35 percent of the convention vote could challenge the endorsed candidate in a primary. There was no Senate election in Delaware in 1980, the first year that the state used the direct primary system.

Georgia

1. Two Senate primaries were held simultaneously in 1972: a special primary for the remainder of the term of Richard B. Russell (D), who died Jan. 21, 1971, and a regular primary for the full term beginning in January 1973. Gambrell, who was appointed to the Senate seat in 1971, led candidates in both parties, but lost both primary runoffs to Nunn. Returns for the special primary from the Elections Research Center, Washington, D.C.

Kentucky

1. Candidates for the special election to fill the unexpired term of Sen. Alben W. Barkley (D), who died April 30, 1956, were nominated by the Democratic and Republican state committees, not by primaries. The 1956 Senate primary in Kentucky was for the Class 3 seat that was slated to be filled that year.

Maryland

1. Until 1962 Maryland used a system of convention unit votes, with each county (and each of the six legislative districts into which Baltimore city was divided) being allocated as many unit votes as it had members of the state legislature, ranging from three to seven. These unit votes were automatically credited to the candidate carrying the county or legislative district.

2. Blair withdrew after the Republican primary. Alan L. Keyes was substituted by the party state central committee.

3. In 1956, because Tydings and Mahoney tied in unit votes at 76 each, Tydings won the nomination with the higher popular vote. But illness forced him to retire from the campaign and Mahoney was substituted by the party state committee.

1. Robert P. Griffin (R) was appointed in May 1966 to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Sen. Patrick V. McNamara (D) on April 30. On Aug. 2 two Senate primaries were held simultaneously, a special primary for the remainder of McNamara's term and a regular primary for the full term beginning in January 1967. Griffin, who was unopposed for the Republican nomination, and G. Mennen Williams (D) won both primaries. In the November general election Griffin defeated Williams for both the short and the full terms. Returns for the special primary from the Elections Research Center, Washington, D.C.

South Carolina

1. Maybank had been renominated July 13, 1954, but died Sept. 1. Officials of the South Carolina Democratic Party, charged with replacing him on the ballot for the November general election, declined to order a new primary and selected state Sen. Edgar A. Brown as their candidate. He was defeated in the election by former governor J. Strom Thurmond (D 1947–1951), who waged a successful write-in campaign.

1. A special election was held to fill the five-year unexpired term of Sen. Henry M. Jackson (D), who died Sept. 1, 1983. Under Washington's so-called "jungle" primary, all 33 candidates appeared on the same Oct. 11 ballot with their party designations. The two highest vote getters, Dan Evans (R) and Mike Lowry (D), won ballot positions for the special election. Percentages are calculated here as if candidates had run in separate party primaries.

2. In 1998 Washington instituted an open primary with all candidates running on a single, multiparty ballot with their parties designated. Nominations went to the candidate with the highest vote in each party. Percentages were calculated here as if candidates had run in separate party primaries.

Introduction

NEXT TO THE PRESIDENT, governors are the most powerful elected officials in the United States. Some preside over states that are larger than many foreign countries. Every governor but Nebraska's must deal with a legislature that is partisan and bicameral in nature, just like the U.S. Congress.

Over the years, many voters have regarded executive experience as a governor more akin to that of the president than service as a legislator, military commander, or business leader, which helps to explain why four of the six presidents since 1977 have been governors or former governors. (The exceptions were George H. W. Bush and Barack Obama.)

In all, seventeen of the nation's forty-four presidents (or 40 percent) have first been governors—including, in the past century, Ronald Reagan of California; Calvin Coolidge of Massachusetts; Woodrow Wilson of New Jersey; Grover Cleveland, Theodore Roosevelt, and Franklin D. Roosevelt of New York; and George W. Bush of Texas. More recently, though, it is not only big-state governors who have made the leap to the White House, but executives from more rural states as well, including Jimmy Carter of Georgia and Bill Clinton of Arkansas. (See box, "Governors Who Became President," p. 153, in Vol. I.)

In the latter years of the twentieth century and into the twenty-first more members of Congress decided they wanted an active role in fashioning policy that was increasingly becoming a hallmark of state government. The downsizing of the federal government in the late twentieth century shifted power to the states, as they became laboratories of government experimentation on issues from education to welfare reform.

As a consequence, a number of politicians aborted promising careers on Capitol Hill to return to state government. In 1998 Republican senator Dirk Kempthorne exchanged his U.S. Senate seat for the governorship of his home state of Idaho. In 2000 three members of the U.S. House ran for governor in their home states, although only one—Democrat Robert "Bob" Wise of West Virginia—was successful. In 2002 Republican Frank H. Murkowski gave up his Senate seat to become governor of Alaska. Jon Corzine left a Senate seat in 2005 to become New Jersey governor and Ted Strickland gave up his House seat in 2007 after being elected Ohio governor. Bob Riley in 2004 became Alabama's governor after serving six years in the House. A particularly notable figure was Bill Richardson, a Democrat, who became New Mexico's governor in 2003 after a multifaceted career as House member, United Nations ambassador, and secretary of energy.

But the path from statehouse to Washington still is traveled by governors. In 2009 President Barack Obama drew two governors into his cabinet: Janet Napolitano of Arizona and Kathleen Sebelius of Kansas. A third, Richardson of New Mexico, also was tapped by Obama for a cabinet post, but Richardson withdrew following reports of a federal investigation into work an investment company won from the state after the company contributed to Richardson's political action committee.

For all their expanding influence in these years, however, governors still remained under constraints not facing other officials elected under the federal system of government. Presidents have been limited to two terms since 1951 by constitutional amendment, but the Supreme Court has nullified state efforts to impose term limits on members of Congress. By contrast, nearly three-fourths of the states limit their governors to a single term (as in the case of Virginia) or two consecutive terms, although in many states governors may serve again after a one-term hiatus.

Another stark limit on a governor's ability to innovate came crashing down on all state governments in 2008 and 2009 when the nation, and most of the world, plunged into a financial crisis that was developing into the worst since the Great Depression of the 1930s. By the end of 2008 the United States officially had been in a recession for a year and conditions only worsened in 2009. Rapidly rising unemployment, which reached 9.5 percent in June 2009, added to the declining financial and housing markets. The financial meltdown was decimating state budgets as tax revenue evaporated and costs of government services headed up. With a budget larger than all but about seven nations, California wrestled with closing a $26 billion gap between spending and revenue, and in July 2009 the state began issuing “IOUs” to creditors. While California’s budget situation was the worst, other states faced comparable shortfalls. Unlike the federal government, state constitutions require a balanced budget.

As a result, the federal government—through vast spending programs approved in Congress and executive agencies—was attempting to get the economy moving again and in the meantime providing substantial financial aid to state governments.

The election of governors by popular vote goes back to the early years of the Republic in the late eighteenth century. But the first female governors were not elected until 1924, four years after the Nineteenth Amendment granted women’s suffrage in every state. Elected that year to succeed their husbands were Nellie T. Ross of Wyoming and Miriam “Ma” Ferguson of Texas, both Democrats.

The first two Hispanic governors were elected in 1974, Democrats Jerry Apodaca in New Mexico and Raul Castro in neighboring Arizona. The first popularly elected African American governor was Democrat L. Douglas Wilder of Virginia, who won narrowly in 1989. Gary Locke, a Democrat of Chinese descent, became the first Asian American governor with his election in Washington in 1996.

Throughout most of the period since the end of World War II, Democrats have held a majority of the nation’s governorships, cresting at thirty-seven after the Watergate crisis in the mid-1970s. But Republicans did better after the 1994 election until their party nationally was turned out by voters in 2006 and 2008. After the 2004 election, twenty-eight governors were Republicans, twenty-two were Democrats. But following the 2006 voting, Democrats held twenty-eight seats and the GOP’s twenty-two. In 2008 Democrats improved on that by one, holding initially twenty-nine seats to twenty-one for the Republicans. That ratio went back to the twenty-eight to twenty-two when Napolitano, a Democrat, was succeeded by a Republican lieutenant governor. Sebelius’s departure from Kansas did not affect the ratio because her successor was a Democrat. (See Table 28-1, below.)

Gubernatorial duties vary in detail from state to state, but basically they are the same. Most state constitutions today have the “strong governor, weak legislature” system, which is the reverse of the situation that prevailed at the dawn of the Republic.

The newly freed states looked with suspicion on the office of governor. In the colonial era, the British-appointed governors were the symbols of the mother country’s control and, the revolutionaries argued, of tyranny. Colonial assemblies, however, were able to gain control over appropriations and thus became the champions of colonial rights against the governors. After the Revolutionary War, when drawing up their constitutions, states gave most of the power to the NOTE: The figures above show the number of governorships held by the two parties after each even-numbered election since 1950. They do not reflect midterm changes or the results of elections in odd-numbered years.

1. The party division immediately following the 2008 elections was twenty-nine Democrats and twenty-one Republicans. However, President-elect Barack Obama named Arizona governor Janet Napolitano, a Democrat, as secretary of homeland security. She was succeeded by Arizona’s secretary of state, Jan Brewer, a Republican, giving the twenty-eight to twenty-two division as of January 2009.

legislative bodies and imposed restrictions on governors, including the length of the term of office and the method of election.

LENGTH OF TERMS

As of 1789 four New England states—Connecticut, Massachusetts, New Hampshire, and Rhode Island—held gubernatorial elections every year. Some of the Middle Atlantic states favored somewhat longer terms; New York and Pennsylvania had three-year terms for their governors, although New Jersey instituted a one-year term. The border and southern states had a mix: Maryland and North Carolina governors served a one-year term; South Carolina had a two-year term; and Delaware, Virginia, and Georgia had three-year terms. No state had a four-year term.

Over the years states have changed the length of gubernatorial terms. With some occasional back and forth movement, the general trend has been toward lengthening terms. New York, for example, changed the term of office of its governor four times. Beginning in 1777 with a three-year term, the state switched to a two-year term in 1820, back to a three-year term in 1876, back to a two-year term in 1894, and to a four-year term beginning in 1938.

Maryland provides another example of a state that changed its gubernatorial term several times. Beginning with a one-year term in 1776, the state extended the term to three years in 1838, then to four years in 1851. Regular gubernatorial elections were held every second odd year from then through 1923, when the state had one three-year term so that future elections would be held in even-numbered years, beginning in 1926. Thus, the state held gubernatorial elections in 1919, 1923, and 1926 and then every four years after that.

The trend toward longer gubernatorial terms shows up clearly by comparing the length of terms in 1900 and 2008. Of the forty-five states in the Union in 1900, twenty-two, almost half, had two-year terms. One (New Jersey) had a three-year term, while Rhode Island and Massachusetts were the only states left with one-year terms. The remaining twenty states had four-year gubernatorial terms.

As of 2008, forty-three of those same states had four-year terms, and the five states admitted to the Union after 1900—Oklahoma (1907), Arizona and New Mexico (1912), Alaska and Hawaii (1959)—had four-year gubernatorial terms. This left only two states with two-year terms: New Hampshire and Vermont.

Arkansas, one of the last holdouts, voted in 1984 to switch to a four-year term, effective in 1986. Rhode Island voters in 1992 approved a constitutional change to a four-year term beginning with the 1994 election. New Hampshire voters, on the other hand, in 1984 rejected a proposal for a four-year gubernatorial term. (See Table 28-2, below.)

ELECTIONS IN NONPRESIDENTIAL YEARS

Along with the change to longer terms for governors came another trend—away from holding gubernatorial elections in presidential election years. Except for North Dakota, every state that switched in the twentieth century to four-year gubernatorial terms scheduled its elections in nonpresidential years. Moreover, Florida, which held its quadrennial gubernatorial elections in presidential years, changed to nonpresidential years in 1966. To make the switch, the state shortened to two years the term of the governor elected in 1964, then resumed the four-year term in 1966. Illinois made a similar switch in 1976. Louisiana switched its gubernatorial election to nonpresidential years in 1975. These states held one election on a different than regular cycle and

1. Oklahoma was admitted to the Union in 1907, Arizona and New Mexico in 1912, and Alaska and Hawaii in 1959. Oklahoma, Alaska, and Hawaii always have had four-year gubernatorial terms; Arizona began with a two-year term and switched to four years in 1970. New Mexico began with a four-year term, changed to two years in 1916, and went back to four years in 1970.

2. Massachusetts switched from a one- to a two-year term in 1920 and to a four-year term in 1966.

3. Rhode Island switched from a one- to a two-year term in 1912 and to a four-year term in 1994.

then resumed their regular four-year rotation. Arkansas switched from a two-year to a four-year term in 1984 and chose to select its governors in nonpresidential election years beginning in 1986.

These changes left only nine states—Delaware, Indiana, Missouri, Montana, North Carolina, North Dakota, Utah, Washington, and West Virginia—holding quadrennial gubernatorial elections at the same time as the presidential election. New Hampshire and Vermont still had two-year terms, so every other gubernatorial election in these two states occurred in a presidential year. Five states—Kentucky, Louisiana, Mississippi, New Jersey, and Virginia—elect governors in odd-numbered years.

METHODS OF ELECTION

Yet another way in which Americans of the early federal period restricted their governors was by the method of election. In 1789 only in New York and the four New England states did the people directly choose their governors by popular vote. In the remaining eight states, governors were chosen by the state legislatures, thus enhancing the power of the legislatures in their dealings with the governors. But several factors—including the democratic trend to elect public officials directly, the increasing trust in the office of governor, and the need for a stronger and more independent chief executive—led to the gradual introduction of popular votes in all the states.

By the 1860s the remaining eight original states had switched to popular ballots. Pennsylvania was first, in 1790, and was followed by Delaware in 1792, Georgia in 1825, North Carolina in 1835, Maryland in 1838, New Jersey in 1844, Virginia in 1851, and South Carolina in 1865, after the Civil War.

All the states admitted to the Union after the original thirteen, with one exception, made provision from the beginning for popular election of their governors. The exception was Louisiana, which from its admission in 1812 until a change in the state constitution in 1845 had a unique system of gubernatorial elections. The people participated by voting in a first-step popular election. In a second step, the legislature was to select the governor from the two candidates receiving the highest popular vote.

NUMBER OF TERMS

Another limitation placed on governors is a restriction on the number of terms they are allowed to serve. In the early years at least three states had such limitations: governors of Maryland were eligible to serve three consecutive one-year terms and then were required to retire for at least one year; Pennsylvania allowed its governors three consecutive three-year terms and then forced retirement for at least one term; and in New Jersey, according to the constitution of 1844, a governor could serve only one three-year term before retiring for at least one term.

In the last decades of the twentieth century, increasing voter discontent with government performance and with politicians stoked a movement to limit the number of years a person could serve in public office. The movement was especially pronounced at the gubernatorial level. By the middle of the first decade of the twenty-first century, only fourteen states did not impose some term limits on their governors: Connecticut, Idaho, Illinois, Iowa, Massachusetts, Minnesota, New Hampshire, New York, North Dakota, Texas, Utah, Vermont, Washington, and Wisconsin.

The lack of a term limit has resulted in long gubernatorial tenures in some of these states. New York's Mario M. Cuomo, a Democrat, was defeated trying for a fourth term as governor in 1994. Wisconsin's Tommy G. Thompson, a Republican, was in the middle of his fourth term when he was tapped to be the secretary of health and human services after the 2000 election. Vermont's Howard B. Dean, a Democrat, was elected to a fifth two-year term in 2000. Most of the other states have placed a limit of two consecutive terms on their governor, which has meant eight years continuously in office. A few states have had variations on this theme. (See Table 28-3, p. 1561.)

MAJORITY VOTE REQUIREMENT

A peculiarity of gubernatorial voting that has almost disappeared from the American political scene is the requirement that the winning candidate receive a majority of the popular vote. Otherwise, the choice devolves upon the state legislature or, in some cases, a runoff between the two leading candidates is required. Centered in New England, this practice was used mainly in the nineteenth century. All six present-day New England states as well as Arizona, Georgia, and Mississippi have had such a provision governing their gubernatorial election at one time or another. New Hampshire, Vermont, Massachusetts, and Connecticut already had the provision when they entered the Union between 1789 and 1791.

Rhode Island required a majority election but did not adopt a provision for legislative election until 1842; Maine adopted a majority provision when it split off from Massachusetts to form a separate state in 1820. Georgia put the majority provision in its constitution when it switched from legislative to popular election of governors in 1825. Mississippi wrote the majority provision into its constitution in 1890. Arizona had the provision in 1990 when a runoff was required early the following year to decide the governorship.

The purpose of the majority provision appears to have been to safeguard against a candidate's winning with a small fraction of the popular vote in a multiple field. In most of

New England, the provision was part of the early state constitutions, formed largely in the 1780s, before the development of the two-party system.

The prospect of multiple-candidate fields diminished with the coming of the two-party system. Nevertheless, each of these states had occasion to use the provision at least once. Sometimes, in an extremely close election, minor party candidates received enough of a vote to keep the winner from getting a majority of the total vote. At other times strong third-party movements or disintegration of the old party structure resulted in the election being thrown into the state legislature.

Vermont retains the majority vote provision, and its legislature chose the governor in January 1987, the first time it had done so since 1912, and again in January 2003. Georgia long had a majority vote requirement for governor, lowered late last century to 45 percent. But instead of legislative election, Georgia law provides for a runoff between the top two contenders three weeks after the general election. Mississippi has a majority vote provision that was not used until 1999, when neither major party candidate received a majority of the vote, throwing the election into the Democratic-controlled House of the Legislature. On January 4, 2000, as expected, the House elected the Democratic candidate, Lt. Gov. Ronnie Musgrove, who had edged Republican Mike Parker in the popular vote, 49.6 percent to 48.5 percent.

Following are the states that have had the majority vote provision for governor, the years in which the choice devolved on the legislature because of it, and the current status of the majority vote provision:

- Arizona. Arizona adopted and used a runoff provision in 1990. Republican Fife Symington led Democrat Terry Goddard in the regularly scheduled November general election, 49.6 percent to 49.2 percent, and subsequently won the February 1991 runoff with 52.4 percent. Arizona has since rescinded the majority vote requirement.
- Connecticut. No gubernatorial candidate received a majority of the popular vote, thus throwing the election into the legislature, in the following years subsequent to 1824: 1833, 1834, 1842, 1844, 1846, 1849, 1850, 1851, 1854, 1855, 1856, 1878, 1884, 1886, 1888, and 1890. Following the election of 1890, the legislature was unable to choose a new governor, so the outgoing governor, Republican Morgan G. Bulkeley, continued to serve through the entire new term (1891–1893). The provision was repealed in 1901. The years before 1824 in which the provision was used, if any, were unavailable from the Connecticut secretary of state's office.
- Georgia. Although the majority vote requirement was contained in the state's constitution as early as 1825, it was not used until the twentieth century. In 1966, with

REMOVAL OF A GOVERNOR FROM OFFICE

Term limits ensure a steady turnover of governors in most states. Elections every four years (only two states have two-year terms for their governor) also enable the voters to replace an unpopular governor. In addition, governors guilty of unethical conduct, crimes and misdemeanors, or voter outrage with what is seen as executive incompetence may be removed from office in the midst of their term through impeachment or recall.

The recall of a governor, which requires the holding of a special election if enough voters petition for removal, is an option in roughly one-third of the states. But it has been used only twice against a governor. In 1921 North Dakota voters ousted Lynn J. Frazier of the Republican and National Prohibition Party, who had been forced into a special election with Ragnvald A. Nestos, an Independent Republican, which Nestos won. Frazier was in his third two-year term when he was removed, along with two cabinet members. The following year Frazier was elected to the U.S. Senate, where he served until 1941.

In October 2003, California voters recalled Democrat Gray Davis from the governor's chair and elected Republican Arnold Schwarzenegger, an Austrian-born bodybuilder and film actor, to replace him. California had been rocked by an energy crisis, replete with blackouts, during Davis's first term, but he had limped to reelection in 2002. However, after the election California was faced with a large state budget deficit that Davis and the state legislature seemed powerless to solve. Recall proponents easily collected the roughly 900,000 signatures needed to force a vote in fall 2003. The special election featured a two-part ballot, with 55.4 percent of voters favoring Davis's recall and 48.6 percent choosing Schwarzenegger as his successor among a field of 135 candidates.

Impeachment by the state legislature, similar to the federal system in which the House impeaches (charges) and the Senate acquits or convicts, has been used eight times to remove governors. The most recent impeachment case was Illinois governor Rod Blagojevich, a Democrat, who was removed on January 29, 2009. Blagojevich's case stemmed from an investigation by a U.S. attorney, Patrick Fitzgerald, that had been underway for several years, into political corruption in the state. Blagojevich and his chief of staff John Harris were charged in December 2009 with mail and wire fraud, bribery, and efforts to secure money in return for political benefits—so-called pay to play. The most sensational charge was Blagojevich's alleged effort to solicit payment in return for filling the U.S. Senate seat that fell open on the election of Barack Obama, the incumbent, as president in November 2008.

The Illinois House voted twice to impeach the governor, first by 113–1 and later by 114–1. The single no vote was cast by Blagojevich's sister-in-law, Deborah Mell. The Senate convicted the governor 59–0 on January 29, 2009, removing him from office and barring him from holding future office.

During the period leading up to his removal, Blagojevich named Roland W. Burris, a Democrat, on December 31, 2008, to Obama's Senate seat. Burris was a former Illinois attorney general and the first African American elected to statewide office. The appointment provoked a political backlash because of the ethical cloud over Blagojevich, although Burris himself was not believed implicated in the scandal to sell Obama's seat. At first Senate leaders declared they would not seat Burris, but after a number of Democrats in the Democratic caucus said there was no legal impediment to seating him, the leaders relented. Burris was sworn in on January 15, 2009.

Before Blagojevich's impeachment, the most recent case was that of Arizona governor Evan Mecham, a Republican, who was impeached and convicted in January 1988. Mecham was found guilty of obstructing an investigation and improperly using official funds. His removal through impeachment ended a recall movement against him.

Other governors have resigned after being convicted in the judicial system. For example, after his 1977 conviction on federal mail fraud charges, Maryland governor Marvin Mandel, a Democrat, served time in prison while suspended from office. After his conviction was reversed, Mandel served the remaining few hours of his term.

Alabama governor Guy Hunt, a Republican, was removed from office in 1993, under provisions of the state constitution, after he was convicted of diverting inaugural funds to personal use. Jim Guy Tucker, a Democrat, resigned as governor of Arkansas in 1996 after being convicted of bank fraud conspiracy in connection with a real estate scandal. In September 1997 Arizona governor Fife Symington, a Republican, resigned after being convicted of making false statements to obtain loans for his real estate business. In January 2001 outgoing president Bill Clinton pardoned Symington. In July 2004 Connecticut governor John Rowland, a Republican, resigned under the threat of impeachment for accepting gifts from state employees and contractors. In March 2005 Rowland was sentenced to a year in prison.

Eight governors have been impeached and removed from office. (One of these, James Ferguson, resigned but in the impeachment proceedings was declared ineligible to hold office.) The following lists the governors, their states, and the years in which they were impeached:

- William Holden, North Carolina, 1871
- David Butler, Nebraska, 1871
- William Sulzer, New York, 1913
- James Ferguson, Texas, 1917
- John C. Walton, Oklahoma, 1923
- Henry S. Johnston, Oklahoma, 1929
- Evan Mecham, Arizona, 1988
- Rod Blagojevich, Illinois, 2009

an emerging Republican Party, a controversial Democratic nominee, and an Independent Democrat all affecting the gubernatorial race, no candidate received a majority of the vote. The legislature subsequently chose Democrat Lester Maddox, who had trailed Republican Howard H. Callaway by 3,039 votes in the election tally. Controversy surrounding this experience led to the change from legislative choice to a popular vote runoff between the top two contenders when neither attained a majority. But that in itself has proved controversial. In the 1992 Senate election, after Democratic incumbent Wyche Fowler led the first round of voting with 49.2 percent of the popular vote, he lost the runoff to Republican Paul Coverdell. Following that outcome, the percentage needed to trigger a runoff in state elections was lowered to 45 percent. Earlier, in 1946, the Georgia legislature attempted to choose the governor under unusual circumstances not covered by the majority vote requirement. The governor-elect, Democrat Eugene Talmadge, died before taking office. The legislature chose Talmadge's son, Herman E. Talmadge, as the new governor. Herman Talmadge was eligible for consideration on the basis that he received enough write-in votes in the general election to make him the second-place candidate. But the state supreme court voided the legislature's choice and declared that the lieutenant governor-elect, Democrat Melvin E. Thompson should be governor.

- Maine. Maine achieved statehood in 1820 with a majority vote provision for governor but repealed it in 1880. During this sixty-year span, the legislature was called on to choose the governor nine times, in 1840, 1846, 1848, 1852, 1853, 1854, 1855, 1878, and 1879.
- Massachusetts. As with the other New England states, Massachusetts originally had a requirement for majority voting in gubernatorial elections. However, after the legislature was forced to choose the governor for six straight elections from 1848 to 1853, Massachusetts repealed the provision in 1855. The years in which it was used were 1785, 1833, 1842, 1843, 1845, 1848, 1849, 1850, 1851, 1852, and 1853.
- Mississippi. This state has had a majority voting requirement since its 1890 constitution but the provision was never needed for more than a century. Actually, a double majority is required in Mississippi. The winning candidate must receive a majority of both the popular vote and a majority of the "electoral vote," which is calculated by awarding one vote to the winner in each state House district. In 1999, for the first time, no gubernatorial candidate achieved the required double majority. In fact, no candidate won a majority of either the popular or the electoral vote. Democrat Musgrove led in the popular vote with 49.6 percent, while Musgrove and Republican Parker tied in the electoral vote, 61–61. The election was then thrown into Mississippi's Democratic-held House, which in January 2000 chose Musgrove by a vote of 86–36.
- New Hampshire. New Hampshire's mandated majority vote for governor was in force from 1784 through 1912, when it was repealed. The outcome of the following gubernatorial elections was determined by the legislature: 1785, 1787, 1789, 1790, 1812, 1824, 1846, 1851, 1856, 1863, 1871, 1874, 1875, 1886, 1888, 1890, 1906, and 1912.
- Rhode Island. Under the constitution of 1842, Rhode Island required a majority vote to win the gubernatorial election. Under this mandate, the legislature chose the governor in the years 1846, 1875, 1876, 1880, 1889, 1890, and 1891. Because of a disagreement between the two houses of the state legislature, the ballots for governor were not counted in 1893, and the Republican incumbent, Daniel Russell Brown, continued in office for another term of one year. The provision for majority voting then was repealed.
 Before 1842 Rhode Island also had a requirement for a popular majority, but the legislature was not allowed to choose a new governor if no candidate achieved a majority. Three times—in 1806, 1832, and 1839—there was a lack of a majority in a gubernatorial election, with a different outcome each time. In 1806 the lieutenant governor-elect served as acting governor for the term. In 1832 the legislature mandated a new election, but still no majority choice was reached; three more elections were held, all without a majority being achieved, so the same state officers were continued until the next regular election. In 1839, when neither the gubernatorial nor lieutenant governor's race yielded a winner by majority, the senior state senator acted as governor for the term.
- Vermont. Vermont's provision for majority gubernatorial election resulted in the legislature's picking the governor twenty-one times: 1789, 1797, 1813, 1814, 1830, 1831, 1832, 1834, 1841, 1843, 1845, 1846, 1847, 1848, 1849, 1852, 1853, 1902, 1912, 1987, and 2003. In January 1987 the legislature elected Democrat Madeleine M. Kunin, who had won the popular vote the previous November with 47.0 percent of the vote. In January 2003 the legislature elected Republican Jim Douglas, who had won the popular vote in November 2002 with 44.9 percent. Even though the number of Democratic and Republican state legislators was roughly equal, Douglas was elected by a vote of 159–16. On another occasion, 1835, the legislature failed to choose a new governor because of a deadlock and the lieutenant governor-elect served as governor for the term. The Vermont provision remains in force.

HOTBED OF VOLATILITY

The place in the electoral process to look for competition in the twenty-first century has not been the elections for Congress, but those for governor. Of the thirty-six gubernatorial contests decided in 2002, twenty-four were won with less than 55 percent of the total vote; twenty governorships switched party hands. Democrats picked up seats in some unlikely states, such as Kansas, Oklahoma, and Wyoming. Republicans scored victories on some similarly unlikely terrain, such as Hawaii and Maryland, although Maryland returned to its traditional Democratic roots in 2006.

The vast majority of governorships that switched party hands in 2002 were open seats, but a number of incumbent governors ran into trouble at the ballot box. Four of the sixteen incumbents who sought reelection were defeated, including a trio of Democrats in the Deep South states of Alabama, Georgia, and South Carolina. If the congressional races that year were a place where voters could show their support for the national war on terrorism, the gubernatorial races were the place to vent their dissatisfaction with economic problems and state budgetary decisions.

The volatility in the governorships continued in 2003. All three regularly scheduled gubernatorial elections—in Kentucky, Louisiana, and Mississippi—resulted in a change of parties. In a special recall election that same year in California, Democratic incumbent Gray Davis was ousted and replaced by Republican Arnold Schwarzenegger. In 2004, four of the eleven gubernatorial elections produced a party switch. One that did not was in Washington, where two recounts were required before Democrat Christine Gregoire emerged the winner by one of the smallest margins in any major statewide election anywhere—just 133 votes out of 2.8 million cast. In June 2005 a state judge upheld her victory after a court challenge by losing candidate Republican Dino Rossi.

The landscape in 2006 and 2008 favored the Democrats as the national mood turned sour on the Republican Party. In 2006, in addition to picking up the Maryland seat, Democrats won gubernatorial seats in Arkansas, Colorado, Massachusetts, New York, and Ohio. Before that election, the GOP held twenty-eight seats to the Democrat's twenty-two. After that election the numbers were exactly reversed. Not much changed in 2008 when the Democrats picked up just one governorship, an open seat in Missouri. That loss by the GOP was soon offset by the switch in Arizona when the Democratic governor, leaving for Obama's cabinet, was succeeded by a Republican secretary of state.

The volatile nature of gubernatorial races has also made for situations where third-party and independent candidacies could flourish. Since 1990, four have won governorships—in Alaska, Connecticut, Maine, and Minnesota. Maine's Angus King won two terms as an independent (in 1994 and 1998). The others—Walter J. Hickel in Alaska, Lowell P. Weicker Jr. in Connecticut, and Jesse Ventura in Minnesota—were elected on third-party ballot lines, served one term, and retired.

Governors of the States, 1776–2009

THIS CHAPTER contains a listing of state governors from 1776 to July 2009. Arranged alphabetically by state, the lists provide the name, political affiliation, and dates of service of each state's governors in chronological order. Also included are revolutionary governors during the period beginning with the Declaration of Independence in 1776 to the original thirteen states' ratification of the Constitution. The date when a state ratified the Constitution or entered the union is listed below the state's name.

The primary sources used for the names, party affiliations, and dates of service for governors were Joseph E. Kallenbach and Jessamine S. Kallenbach, American State Governors, 1776–1976, 3 vols. (Dobbs Ferry, N.Y.: Oceana Publishing, 1977); William W. Hunt, The Book of Governors (Los Angeles: Washington Typographers, 1935); Samuel R. Solomon, Governors of the States 1900–1974 (Lexington, Ky.: Council of State Governments, 1974); gubernatorial election returns provided by the Inter-University Consortium for Political and Social Research (ICPSR), appearing on pages 1597–1660; The Encyclopedia Americana, 30 vols. (Danbury, Conn.: Grolier Education, 1982); issues of CQ Weekly; state manuals published by the state governments; and state governors' offices and Web sites.

Names, Party Affiliation, and Dates of Service

For the revolutionary period from 1776 to 1787, the Kallenbachs' American State Governors, 1776–1976 was used for names of state governors and dates of service. In some cases the Kallenbachs provide complete dates (month, day, and year), in other cases only month and year. A few states during this period called their early chief executives “presidents.” These chief executives are included in the list and footnoted.

Because political parties did not exist formally in the early years of the Republic, classification of governors by party during this period can be difficult or misleading. In cases where party affiliation was not appropriate or could not be determined, no party designation appears. After 1824, the starting date for the ICPSR gubernatorial election returns, the ICPSR data were used where they provided information on party affiliation. While the complete source annotations for the ICPSR collection are too extensive to publish here, information on the sources for specific election returns can be obtained through the ICPSR. (See box, ICPSR Historical Election Returns File, p. xviii, Vol. I.) State manuals and The Encyclopedia Americana, which gives governors' party affiliation for some states, were also consulted.

For the eighteenth and nineteenth centuries, Hunt's The Book of Governors and state manuals were used for names and dates of service. Hunt provides the names of state governors and dates of service—in some cases complete dates (month, day, and year), in other cases only month and year and in still other cases only the dates of gubernatorial elections. CQ Press has used the most precise dates available from Hunt and state manuals.

For the twentieth century, The Governors of the States 1900–1974 was the primary source for the names of governors and dates of service. The party designations appearing in the ICPSR election returns were used to assign party affiliation. Where the ICPSR returns indicated two or more party designations, only the major party is listed. (See “Political Party Abbreviations,” p. 1772.)

Footnotes

Footnotes, based on information from the above sources, have been used to indicate the following circumstances:

- Deaths, resignations, or removals from office and succession of lieutenant governors or other officials to governorships.
- Circumstances surrounding disputed elections.

In the twentieth century the trend was toward longer gubernatorial terms and limitations on the number of consecutive terms, as well as unusual gubernatorial election procedures in some states. (See Chapter 28, Introduction.)

Georgia

1. Georgia's first two chief executives were called "president and commander in chief." Bulloch died Feb. 22, 1777.
2. Succeeded to office.
3. The revolutionaries were briefly split into two factions, one electing Wereat and the other Walton. The two factions came together in 1780 and elected Howley.

Georgia (continued)

4. Howley was elected both governor and representative to the Continental Congress. He chose to go to Congress in February.

5. Succeeded to office. Resigned Aug. 16, 1781.

6. Succeeded to office.

7. Military governor.

8. Resigned Oct. 23, 1871.

9. As president of the state Senate, he succeeded to office.

10. Died March 4, 1883.

11. As president of the state Senate, he succeeded to office.

12. Resigned Nov. 16, 1911.

13. As president of the state Senate, he succeeded to office.

14. Resigned Jan. 10, 1933.

15. Died Dec. 21, 1946, before his inauguration.

16. Eugene Talmadge's death led to a famous controversy that lasted several months, during which three different men claimed office as governor. The Talmadge-dominated legislature elected Herman Talmadge, Eugene's son, to serve out his term, but this action was disputed by outgoing governor Ellis Arnall and Lieutenant Governor-elect Melvin E. Thompson. Herman Talmadge seized the governor's mansion by force, but was thrown out after sixty-seven days in office by the Georgia Supreme Court, which ruled his election by the legislature unconstitutional. Thompson then assumed office as governor until 1948, when a special election was held. He lost the Democratic Georgia nomination to Talmadge, who then won the special election for the remaining two years of the term. Talmadge was reelected in 1950.

17. Republican candidate Howard Callaway led in the popular vote but failed to win a majority because of write-in votes cast for former governor Ellis Arnall, who had lost the Democratic primary to Lester Maddox. The legislature elected Maddox as governor.

- Under military authority.
- Under military authority.
- Acting governor.
- The 1872 gubernatorial election in Louisiana set off a bitter dispute between Republicans backing Kellogg and Democrats supporting his opponent, John McEnery. Each side organized its own boards to canvass the vote, resulting in two separate sets of election returns, one showing Kellogg the winner, the other McEnery. To add to the confusion, two rival legislatures assumed office, each claiming legitimacy, and Kellogg and McEnery were both inaugurated as governor by their respective factions. President Ulysses S. Grant (R) finally stepped in and recognized Kellogg as the legitimate governor on May 22, 1873.
- The 1876 election set off a dispute similar to that of 1872. Nicholls, the Democrat, and Packard, the Republican, each had election returns showing him the winner. There were also two legislatures, each controlled by a different party. Nicholls set up a de facto state government and was recognized by federal authorities.
- Died in Oct. 1881.
- As lieutenant governor, he succeeded to office. Subsequently elected.

Massachusetts

1. Resigned in March 1785.
2. As lieutenant governor, he succeeded to office.
3. Acting governor.
4. Acting governor.
5. Acting governor.
6. ICPSR data shows that there were two elections for governor in Massachusetts in 1831, and returns for both have been provided. The winner both times was incumbent Levi Lincoln. An explanation was obtained from Albert Bushnell Hart's Commonwealth of Massachusetts, vol. 4 (New York: States History Company, 1930), 82. Massachusetts had a one-year term for its governors during this period. Apparently the state decided in 1831 to move its gubernatorial election from April to November to coincide with presidential elections in 1832 and succeeding years. As a consequence, Lincoln was required to run twice within the same year to make the adjustment.
7. Acting governor.
8. Resigned May 1, 1874.
9. Acting governor.
10. Died March 5, 1896.

Rhode Island

1. Died Oct. 15, 1805.
2. Smith, as first senator, served as governor.
3. No governor was elected in 1806. Willbur, the lieutenant governor, served as acting governor.
4. Resigned Jan. 9, 1821.
5. As lieutenant governor, he succeeded to office.
6. In the 1832 election no candidate for governor received the majority of the total vote cast that was required for election. Elections were held four more times—on May 16, July 18, Aug. 28, and Nov. 21—each one resulting without choice. Arnold was continued in office until 1833. (The returns for this election, p. 1645, show only the first election.)

7. No governor was elected in 1839, no candidate having received a majority of the vote. In addition, no lieutenant governor was elected. King, as first senator, became acting governor for the term. Subsequently reelected three times.

8. Resigned July 20, 1853.

9. As lieutenant governor, he succeeded to office.

10. Resigned March 3, 1863.

11. As president of the state Senate, he succeeded to office.

12. No candidate received a majority of the vote in the election of 1893, and under the law the legislature was required to elect the governor. However, because of a dispute between the two houses no choice was made. Governor Brown continued in office for the term. He was reelected in 1894. The controversy over the election resulted in repeal of the majority-vote requirement in 1893.

13. Died Dec. 16, 1901.

14. As lieutenant governor, he succeeded to office.

15. Died Feb. 4, 1928.

16. As lieutenant governor, he succeeded to office. Subsequently elected.

17. Resigned Oct. 6, 1945.

18. As lieutenant governor, he succeeded to office. Subsequently elected. Resigned Dec. 19, 1950.

19. As lieutenant governor, he succeeded to office.

South Carolina

1. South Carolina's first two chief executives were called presidents. Rutledge resigned March 5, 1778.

2. Chosen by the legislature, he succeeded to office.

3. Died Jan. 23, 1800.
4. As lieutenant governor, he succeeded to office. Subsequently elected.
5. Died April 7, 1840.
6. As lieutenant governor, he succeeded to office.
7. Last Confederate governor. Removed by federal authorities.
8. Provisional governor appointed by President Johnson.
9. Deposed by act of Congress.
10. There was a dispute between two factions in the state house over the elections and seating of eight of its members following the 1876 election. The pro-Chamberlain (R) faction declared Chamberlain to have been reelected and he was reinaugurated on Dec. 7. The pro-Hampton (D) faction also organized as the state house of representatives and on Dec. 14 declared Hampton to have been elected. He was inaugurated on the same day. For a time there were two rival state governments. In several cases arising later, raising the question of Hampton's authority to act as governor, the supreme court of the state declared him to be the lawfully elected chief executive of the state. Chamberlain dropped his claim to the office on April 10, 1877, following the withdrawal of federal troops from the state in March 1877 by President Hayes.
11. Resigned Feb. 26, 1879.
12. As lieutenant governor, he succeeded to office. Resigned in Sept. 1880.
13. As president of the state Senate, he succeeded to office.
14. Resigned July 10, 1886.
15. As lieutenant governor, he succeeded to office.
16. Died June 2, 1899.
17. As lieutenant governor, he succeeded to office. Subsequently elected.
18. Resigned Jan. 14, 1915.
19. As lieutenant governor, he succeeded to office.
20. Resigned May 20, 1922.
21. As lieutenant governor, he succeeded to office.
22. Resigned Nov. 4, 1941.
23. As lieutenant governor, he succeeded to office. Died Feb. 27, 1942.
24. As president of the state Senate, he succeeded to office.
25. Resigned Jan. 2, 1945.
26. As lieutenant governor, he succeeded to office.
27. Resigned April 22, 1965.
28. As lieutenant governor, he succeeded to office. Subsequently elected.

Gubernatorial General Election Returns, 1776–2008

GUBERNATORIAL GENERAL ELECTION RETURNS for all fifty states are presented in this chapter. In earlier editions of Guide to U.S. Elections, gubernatorial returns were only provided back to 1787, when the original thirteen states began ratifying the Constitution. Beginning with the fifth edition, returns for the thirteen original states during the revolutionary period (1776–1787) were added where possible. In a few states during this time governors were appointed rather than elected. In states where elections were held, returns were not always available. The pre-Constitution returns were provided by elections historian Michael J. Dubin, who conducted original research, including examining newspaper reports, manuscript election returns, and other firsthand sources provided by the states' secretaries of state and historical offices.

Returns for the years 1787 through 1823 were obtained from American State Governors, 1776–1976, by Joseph E. Kallenbach and Jessamine S. Kallenbach (Dobbs Ferry, N.Y.: Oceana Publishing, 1977). Those for 1824 through 1973 were obtained from the Inter-University Consortium for Political and Social Research (ICPSR) at the University of Michigan. (See box, ICPSR Historical Returns File, p. xviii, Vol. I.) Major sources for returns from 1974 to 2009 were CQ Press, which obtained them from the state secretaries of state, and the biennial America Votes series, published by CQ Press in Washington, D.C. Richard M. Scammon and Alice V. McGillivray of the Elections Research Center, Washington, D.C., created the series first published in 1956. Since 1996 the series has been compiled under the direction of Rhodes Cook.

The symbol # next to returns before 1974 indicates that CQ Press obtained the returns from a source other than Kallenbach or the ICPSR. A complete list of other sources used appears on page 1660. A “Gubernatorial Candidates Index” is located on pages I-193 to I-213.

In addition to these sources, new elections data research uncovered by Dubin supplements the original material in this edition. CQ Press editors felt the new data was of scholarly merit and worthy of inclusion—much of it filling the gaps of missing names or returns in previous editions of Guide to U.S. Elections.

Presentation of Returns

The gubernatorial returns are arranged alphabetically by state and in chronological order of election within each state listing. The candidate receiving the greatest number of popular votes is listed first with his or her vote total and percentage of the total vote cast, followed in descending order of votes received by all other candidates receiving at least 5 percent of the total vote cast.

Special elections to fill vacancies are designated in the returns.

Vote Totals and Percentages

The ICPSR collection includes all candidates receiving popular votes, only gubernatorial candidates receiving at least 5 percent of the total popular vote for that election are included. For example, the ICPSR data collection for the 1908 Illinois gubernatorial election shows that 1,154,612 votes were cast, with Republican Charles S. Deneen receiving 550,076 votes (47.64 percent), Democrat Adlai E. Stevenson receiving 526,912 votes (45.64 percent), and four other candidates receiving the remaining 77,624 votes (6.72 percent). These four candidates do not appear on page 1612 of this book because none of them received 5 percent or more of the vote.

The percentages used in this section were calculated to two decimal places on the basis of the total number of votes cast in the election and rounded to one place. Thus, on page 1612, for the 1908 Illinois election, Deneen's percentage of the total vote is listed as 47.6 percent and Stevenson's as 45.6 percent. The percentages are rounded to one decimal place and do not add to 100 percent because of the scattered votes for the other four candidates.

Names and Party Designations

Names are listed as they were recorded in the official returns or other source documentation. In some instances, particularly in the nineteenth century, candidate names in the ICPSR file are incomplete. First names were the most commonly missing elements in the original sources consulted by the scholars and archivists who gathered the ICPSR returns. CQ Press has added full names when they could be determined and has corrected obvious misspellings. For this edition, elections scholar Michael J. Dubin assisted in finding missing names and correcting the misspellings of previous editions.

In the ICPSR returns, the distinct—and in many cases, multiple—party designations appearing in the original sources are preserved. In many cases party labels represent combinations of multiparty support received by individual candidates. If, for example, on the ballot and official returns more than one party name was listed next to a candidate's name, then the party designation appearing in the election returns for that candidate will be a unique abbreviation for that combination of parties. (See “Political Party Abbreviations,” p. 1772.)

In the special case of a candidate's name listed separately on the original ballot under more than one party—where returns were reported separately for each party—CQ Press has summed the votes recorded under the several parties and that figure appears as the candidate's total vote. Whenever separate party totals have been summed, a comma separates the abbreviations of the parties contributing the largest and second largest share of the total vote.

Most cases of this special situation occurred in New York and Pennsylvania during the twentieth century. For example, in the original ICPSR returns for New York's 1946 gubernatorial election, James M. Mead received 1,532,161 votes as Democratic Party candidate, 428,903 votes as American Labor Party candidate, and 177,418 votes as Liberal Party candidate for a total of 2,138,482 votes.

In organizing the ICPSR data for publication, CQ Press has summed all votes Mead received from these three parties. Thus, on page 1637 only Mead's total vote of 2,138,482 appears.

CQ Press has also included party abbreviations for the two parties that contributed the most votes to Mead's total—separated by a comma. Thus, immediately following his name appear the abbreviations—D, AM LAB—indicating that Mead was a candidate of at least two parties and that the greatest number of votes he received was as a Democrat.

EXPLANATION OF SYMBOLS

In the returns for gubernatorial elections, symbols are used to denote special circumstances. Where no symbol is used, the candidate who received the most votes won the election on the basis of the popular vote and served as governor. The following is a key to the symbols used:

✓ Elected and served as governor, but the number of votes and the percentage of the total received were not available.

† Elected governor by the state legislature because no candidate received a majority of the popular vote as required by state law at the time of the election. (See p. 1560, for an explanation of the election of governors by state legislatures.)

* Symbol used for two types of situations: (1) the candidate who won the election did not serve as governor because he died before assuming office; (2) none of the candidates running qualified to become governor on the basis of the election returns or action by the state legislature. (For an explanation of a specific case, consult the appropriate state listed in Chapter 29, "Governors of the States, 1776–2009," pp. 1565–1596.)

‡ Disputed election. The symbol is used in a variety of circumstances such as an election dispute resulting in the unseating of a governor after he assumed office or resulting in rival governors each claiming to have been legitimately elected. (For an explanation of a specific case, consult the appropriate state listed in Chapter 29, "Governors of the States, 1776–2009," pp. 1565–1596.)

Information was obtained from a source other than CQ Press's basic sources for this volume. (For a list of the other sources used, see p. 1660.)

California

1. The 2003 election was for a short term to fill a vacancy created by voter approval of a measure to remove Governor Davis from office. The measure passed by a vote of 4,976,274 votes (55.4 percent) for recall to 4,007,783 (44.6 percent) against recall. In the same election, more than 100 candidates ran for the right to succeed Davis. No primary election was held to cull the field, and all candidates, regardless of party, ran together on the same ballot. The winner, Schwarzenegger, is listed as the Republican candidate. The leading Democratic vote-getter, Bustamante, is listed as the Democratic candidate. The third leading candidate was Republican McClintock.

Louisiana

1. Until 1845 the governor was elected by joint vote of the two houses of the legislature, which could choose one of the two who received the most popular votes. In all nine elections under this system the candidate receiving a popular plurality was subsequently chosen by the legislature. Thereafter elections were determined by a plurality of the popular vote.

2. Until 1828, contests were essentially between candidates supported by the "American" and "Creole" factions of the Jeffersonian Republican Party.

3. The 1987 election was decided in the all-party primary unique to Louisiana. The candidate who finished second withdrew.

Vermont

1. Since no candidate won a clear majority of the total vote cast for governor, the election passed to the state legislature. Sitting in joint assembly in January 1987, the legislature elected Kunin with 139 votes to 39 for Smith and 1 for Sanders.

2. In the absence of a majority for any candidate, the legislature elected Douglas governor in January 2003.

In the preceding pages, the symbol # is used to denote returns taken from a source other than CQ Press's principal sources of historical gubernatorial popular election returns: the Inter-University Consortium for Political and Social Research (ICPSR) for 1824–1974 returns; Joseph E. Kallenbach and Jessamine S. Kallenbach, American State Governors, 1776–1976, vol. 1 (Dobbs Ferry, N.Y.: Oceana Publications, 1977) for pre-1824 returns; and CQ Press's biennial series America Votes (Washington, D.C.: CQ Press) for elections since 1975. This page lists the source for elections where the symbol # appears. (For a description of the ICPSR collection, see p. xviii.)

Gubernatorial Primary Election Returns, 1919–2008

GUBERNATORIAL PRIMARY ELECTION RETURNS for all fifty states are presented in this chapter. Returns for most states go back to 1956. Primary returns for eleven southern states (Alabama, Arkansas, Florida, Georgia, Louisiana, Mississippi, North Carolina, South Carolina, Tennessee, Texas, and Virginia) go back to 1919 where available. The vast majority of southern primaries during the period of 1919 to 1973 were held to nominate candidates of the dominant Democratic Party. In many cases, the winner of the Democratic primary went into the general election facing no Republican opponent. (See Chapter 7, The Southern Electoral Experience, Vol. I.)

The major source for primary election returns for all nonsouthern states from 1956 to 2008 is the America Votes series, created by Richard M. Scammon and his wife Mary, at the Elections Research Center in Washington, D.C., and published biennially by CQ Press. The first volume was published in 1956. In later years Scammon was assisted by Alice V. McGillivray, who became the principal editor of the volume until her death in 1995. Since 1996 the series has been compiled under the direction of Rhodes Cook. Other sources include returns obtained by the political staff of CQ Press after each federal election from the state secretaries of state. In cases of discrepancies, CQ Press has accepted the America Votes figure. The first year for which America Votes reported primary returns, 1956, was chosen as the starting point for most states because senatorial primary votes for earlier years are not readily available.

For the eleven southern states that were members of the Civil War Confederacy, the primary election returns presented for the years 1919 through 1973 were obtained, except where indicated by a footnote, from the Inter-University Consortium for Political and Social Research (ICPSR) at the University of Michigan. Major sources for returns since 1973 were Congressional Quarterly, which obtained them from the state secretaries of state and the America Votes series.

Compilation of ICPSR Data File

Statewide candidate totals for southern primary elections for governor were prepared by the ICPSR staff from several sources. Election returns for the years prior to 1949 were obtained from Southern Primaries and Elections (University: University of Alabama Press, 1950), edited by Alexander Heard and Donald S. Strong. It should be noted that, although they transcribed their data from official returns, Professors Heard and Strong found that many of the returns contained errors and discrepancies between the sum of county totals and the state total, or returns published as final in newspapers and secretary of state reports. No attempt was made by Heard and Strong to correct these discrepancies because the source of the error could not be determined.

For the period from 1949 to 1973, candidate totals were acquired from two sources. The first was a collection of southern primary electoral statistics prepared from official returns by Hugh Davis Graham, chair, division of social sciences, University of Maryland (Baltimore County), and Numan V. Bartley, department of history, University of Georgia (Athens). In addition, reference was made to official returns supplied to ICPSR by the various secretaries of state in conjunction with the ICPSR effort to maintain its continuing collection of election materials. The returns obtained from Bartley and Graham, and the secretary of state offices, were compared with published reports of the election outcomes (notably state manuals and the America Votes series) to verify the completeness and accuracy of the returns.

Presentation of Returns

The gubernatorial primary returns are arranged alphabetically by state and in chronological order of election within each state listing.

Candidates are listed in descending order, with the candidate receiving the largest number of popular votes listed first. Percentages of the total vote were calculated on the basis of each candidate's proportion of the total number of votes cast for all candidates within each party's primary, including candidates receiving less than 5 percent of the vote who are not listed in the tables. Percentages have been calculated to two decimal places and rounded to one place. Due to rounding and the scattered votes of minor candidates, percentages in individual primary races may not add up to 100.

Primaries for special elections to fill vacancies and runoff primaries are designated in the returns. For southern states prior to 1974, Republican primary results have been included, whenever available.

Names, Vote Totals, and Percentages

The names of gubernatorial primary candidates are listed as they appeared in the source materials. In a few cases, first names are not known.

For pre-1976 southern primary elections included in this section, the ICPSR computed statewide vote totals for each candidate. (See box, ICPSR Historical Election Returns File, p. xviii, Vol. I.)

Percentages of the total vote were calculated on the basis of each candidate's proportion of the total number of votes cast for all candidates. Percentages have been calculated to two decimal places and rounded to one place. Due to rounding and the scattered votes of minor candidates, percentages in individual primary races may not add up to 100.

If no vote is shown for a candidate but the percentage of total vote is listed as 100 percent, in most cases the candidates in question ran unopposed and state election officials either did not bother to put the candidate's name on the ballot or simply did not make an effort to record the total number of votes.

When gubernatorial primary elections were held under a preferential voting system and the use of second choice votes was required to determine a winner, the symbol appears next to the winner's name. (See "Preferential Primaries," p. 249, Vol. I.)

Where no primary is indicated for a year in which a state elected a governor, it generally means that party conventions chose the nominees. Notes at the end of a state's listing explain other unusual circumstances.

A Gubernatorial Primary Candidates Index is located on pages I-214 to I-226.

Alabama

1. Sparks withdrew from the race May 11, 1938, declining a runoff with Dixon, who became the Democratic nominee.

2. Hamm withdrew May 12, 1950, declining a runoff with Persons, who became the Democratic nominee.

3. After the Democratic runoff primary a subcommittee of Alabama's Democratic party declared Baxley the nominee, deciding that voters who voted in the Republican primary had crossed over and voted in the Democratic runoff primary for Graddick, against party rules. This decision was contested through the courts, but the Democratic Party decision was upheld.

	Tony Knowles (D)	24,727	43.6		1. In Alaska's so-called jungle primaries, all candidates for an office appeared together on the same ballot with their parties designated. Nominations went to the Republican and Democrat receiving the most votes for the office. Percentages were calculated here as if candidates had run in separate party primaries.
	Stephen McAlpine (D)	17,482	30.9		2. There were recounts of the votes received by the two top finishers in both primaries. In the Republican recount, Hammond's vote was 31,921 (50.0 percent) and Hickel's was 31,823 (49.9 percent). In the Democratic recount, Croft's vote was 8,910 (50.7 percent) and Merdes's was 8,655 (49.3 percent).
1998	Sam Cotten (D)	13,899	24.5	3. The Republican primary ballot was a single-ballot and only registered Republican, Non Partisan, and Undeclared voters could participate in the primary. All other parties ran on a multiparty ballot and the primary was open to all registered voters except Republicans.

Connecticut

1. In Connecticut, party conventions nominated candidates subject to a system of “challenge” primaries that allowed defeated candidates to petition for a popular vote if they received at least 20 percent of the convention vote. Returns are given here for challenge primaries held for the governorship.

Georgia

1. In the Georgia primaries for the Democratic nomination for governor in 1920, 1926, and 1930, no candidate received a majority of the county unit votes. Thus, runoffs were necessary in each case between the two candidates who received the most county unit votes; these also happened to be the candidates who had the most popular votes.

In the runoffs, the candidate who achieved a county unit majority was the winner, regardless of whether he had a popular vote majority; but the county unit winner also finished first in the popular vote in each case. (See "County Unit System: Georgia," p. 250, Vol. I.)

2. Under Georgia's county unit system, Talmadge actually won the primary easily even though he finished in second place in the popular vote. He received 244 county unit votes, 59.5 percent, to Carmichael's 144 votes, 35.1 percent. (See "County Unit System: Georgia," p. 250, Vol. I.)

Talmadge later won the general election but died before his term was to begin, precipitating a famous crisis in Georgia's gubernatorial succession. (See footnote 16, p. 1572.)

Illinois

1. Paschen withdrew after the primary and the Democratic state committee substituted Richard B. Austin as the party's nominee.

2. Stevenson withdrew after the primary on the grounds that the nominated candidate for lieutenant governor was a known supporter of Lyndon LaRouche, whose views were so different from Stevenson's as to make a joint candidacy impossible. No replacement candidate was named by the Democratic Party. A new party, Illinois Solidarity, was formed with Stevenson as its gubernatorial candidate.

Louisiana

1. Wilson declined a runoff with Long, who became the Democratic nominee.

2. The Democratic and Republican primaries were held Dec. 5, 1959; the Democratic runoff was held Jan. 9, 1960.

3. The Democratic and Republican primaries were held Dec. 7, 1963; the Democratic runoff was held Jan. 11, 1964.

4. In 1975 Louisiana eliminated the partisan primary for governor and instituted an open primary with candidates from all parties running on the same ballot. Any candidate who received a majority appeared in the general election unopposed. If no candidate received 50 percent, a runoff was held between the two top finishers. In 2008 Louisiana returned to a partisan primary system.

5. In 1979 there was a court-ordered recount of the votes for the top three candidates. Results were as follows: Treen: 297,469 votes, 34.6 percent; Lambert: 282,708, 32.8 percent; and Fitzmorris: 280,412, 32.6 percent.

6. Edwards withdrew and no runoff election was held in November.

Virginia

1. The state parties and local party committees traditionally have the option of holding a primary or nominating candidates by convention or committee. If a primary was called and only one candidate filed to run it, then no primary was held.

★ CONSTITUTIONAL PROVISIONS AND AMENDMENTS ON ELECTIONS

Article I

Section 2: The House of Representatives shall be composed of Members chosen every second Year by the People of the several States, and the Electors in each State shall have the Qualifications requisite for Electors of the most numerous Branch of the State Legislature.

No Person shall be a Representative who shall not have attained to the age of twenty five Years, and been seven Years a Citizen of the United States, and who shall not, when elected, be an Inhabitant of that State in which he shall be chosen.

Representatives and direct Taxes shall be apportioned among the several States which may be included within this Union, according to their respective Numbers, which shall be determined by adding to the whole Number of free Persons, including those bound to Service for a Term of Years, and excluding Indians not taxed, three fifths of all other Persons. The actual Enumeration shall be made within three Years after the first Meeting of the Congress of the United States, and within every subsequent Term of ten Years, in such Manner as they shall by Law direct. The Number of Representatives shall not exceed one for every thirty thousand, but each State shall have at least one Representative. . . .

When vacancies happen in the Representation from any State, the Executive Authority thereof shall issue Writs of Election to fill such Vacancies.

Section 3: The Senate of the United States shall be composed of two Senators from each State, chosen by the Legislature thereof, for six Years, and each Senator shall have one Vote.

Immediately after they shall be assembled in Consequence of the first Election, they shall be divided as equally as may be into three Classes. The Seats of the Senators of the first Class shall be vacated at the Expiration of the second Year, of the second Class at the Expiration of the fourth Year, and of the third Class at the Expiration of the sixth Year, so that one third may be chosen every second Year; and if Vacancies happen by Resignation, or otherwise, during the Recess of the Legislature of any State, the Executive thereof may make temporary Appointments until the next Meeting of the Legislature, which shall then fill such Vacancies.

No Person shall be a Senator who shall not have attained to the Age of thirty Years, and been nine Years a Citizen of the United States, and who shall not, when elected, be an Inhabitant of that State for which he shall be chosen. . . .

Section 4: The Times, Places and Manner of holding Elections for Senators and Representatives, shall be prescribed in each State by the Legislature thereof; but the Congress may at any time by Law make or alter such Regulations, except as to the Place of Chusing Senators.

The Congress shall assemble at least once in every Year, and such Meeting shall be on the first Monday in December, unless they shall by Law appoint a different Day.

Section 5: Each House shall be the Judge of the Elections, Returns and Qualifications of its own Members, and a Majority of each shall constitute a Quorum to do Business. . . .

Article II

Section 1: The executive Power shall be vested in a President of the United States of America. He shall hold his Office during the Term of four Years, and, together with the Vice President, chosen for the same term, be elected, as follows.

Each State shall appoint, in such Manner as the Legislature thereof may direct, a Number of Electors, equal to the whole Number of Senators and Representatives to which the State may be entitled in the Congress: but no Senator or Representative, or Person holding an Office of Trust or Profit under the United States, shall be appointed an Elector.

[The Electors shall meet in their respective States, and vote by Ballot for two Persons, of whom one at least shall not be an Inhabitant of the same State with themselves. And they shall make a List of all the Persons voted for, and of the Number of Votes for each; which List they shall sign and certify, and transmit sealed to the Seat of the Government of the United States, directed to the President of the Senate. The President of the Senate shall, in the Presence of the Senate and House of Representatives, open all the Certificates, and the Votes shall then be counted. The Person having the greatest Number of Votes shall be the President, if such Number be a Majority of the whole Number of Electors appointed; and if there be more than one who have such Majority, and have an equal Number of Votes, then the House of Representatives shall immediately chuse by Ballot one of them for President; and if no Person have a Majority, then from the five highest on the List the said House shall in like Manner chuse the President. But in chusing the President, the Votes shall be taken by

States, the Representation from each State having one Vote; a quorum for this Purpose shall consist of a Member or Members from two thirds of the States, and a Majority of all the States shall be necessary to a Choice. In every Case, after the Choice of the President, the Person having the greatest Number of Votes of the Electors shall be the Vice President. But if there should remain two or more who have equal Votes, the Senate shall chuse from them by Ballot the Vice-President.<sup>1</sup>

The Congress may determine the Time of chusing the Electors, and the Day on which they shall give their Votes; which Day shall be the same throughout the United States.

No person except a natural born Citizen, or a Citizen of the United States, at the time of the Adoption of this Constitution, shall be eligible to the Office of President; neither shall any Person be eligible to that Office who shall not have attained to the Age of thirty five Years, and been fourteen Years a Resident within the United States.

Amendment XII

(Ratified July 27, 1804)

The Electors shall meet in their respective states and vote by ballot for President and Vice-President, one of whom, at least, shall not be an inhabitant of the same state with themselves; they shall name in their ballots the person voted for as President, and in distinct ballots the person voted for as Vice-President, and they shall make distinct lists of all persons voted for as President, and of all persons voted for as Vice-President, and of the number of votes for each, which lists they shall sign and certify, and transmit sealed to the seat of the government of the United States, directed to the President of the Senate; . . . The person having the greatest number of votes for President, shall be the President, if such number be a majority of the whole number of Electors appointed; and if no person have such majority, then from the persons having the highest numbers not exceeding three on the list of those voted for as President, the House of Representatives shall choose immediately, by ballot, the President. But in choosing the President, the votes shall be taken by states, the representation from each state having one vote; a quorum for this purpose shall consist of a member or members from two-thirds of the states, and a majority of all the states shall be necessary to a choice. [And if the House of Representatives shall not choose a President whenever the right of choice shall devolve upon them, before the fourth day of March next following, then the Vice-President shall act as President, as in the case of the death or other constitutional disability of the President.—]<sup>2</sup> The person having the greatest number of votes as Vice-President, shall be the Vice-President, if such number be a majority of the whole number of Electors appointed, and if no person have a majority, then from the two highest numbers on the list, the Senate shall choose the Vice President; a quorum for the purpose shall consist of two-thirds of the whole number of Senators, and a majority of the whole number shall be necessary to a choice. But no person constitutionally ineligible to the office of President shall be eligible to that of Vice-President of the United States.

Amendment XIV

(Ratified July 9, 1868)

Section 2: Representatives shall be apportioned among the several States according to their respective numbers, counting the whole number of persons in each State, excluding Indians not taxed. But when the right to vote at any election for the choice of electors for President and Vice President of the United States, Representatives in Congress, the Executive and Judicial officers of a State, or the members of the Legislature thereof, is denied to any of the male inhabitants of such State, being twenty-one years of age,<sup>3</sup> and citizens of the United States, or in any way abridged, except for participation in rebellion, or other crime, the basis of representation therein shall be reduced in the proportion which the number of such male citizens shall bear to the whole number of male citizens twenty-one years of age in such State.

Section 3: No person shall be a Senator or Representative in Congress, or elector of President and Vice President, or hold any office, civil or military, under the United States, or under any State, who, having previously taken an oath, as a member of Congress, or as an officer of the United States, or as a member of any State legislature, or as an executive or judicial officer of any State, to support the Constitution of the United States, shall have engaged in insurrection or rebellion against the same, or given aid or comfort to the enemies thereof. But Congress may by a vote of two-thirds of each House, remove such disability.

Amendment XV

(Ratified February 3, 1870)

The right of citizens of the United States to vote shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or by any State on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude.

Amendment XVII

(Ratified April 8, 1913)

The Senate of the United States shall be composed of two Senators from each State, elected by the people thereof, for six years; and each Senator shall have one vote. The electors in each State shall have the qualification requisite for electors of the most numerous branch of the State legislatures.

When vacancies happen in the representation of any State in the Senate, the executive authority of such State shall issue writs of election to fill such vacancies: Provided, That the legislature of any State may empower the executive thereof to make temporary appointments until the people fill the vacancies by election as the legislature may direct.

This amendment shall not be so construed as to affect the election or term of any Senator chosen before it becomes valid as part of the Constitution.

Amendment XIX

(Ratified August 18, 1920)

The right of citizens of the United States to vote shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or by any State on account of sex.

Amendment XX(Ratified January 23, 1933)*

Section 1: The terms of the President and Vice President shall end at noon on the 20th day of January, and the terms of the Senators and Representatives at noon on the 3d day of January, of the years in which such terms would have ended if this article had not been ratified; and the terms of their successors shall then begin.

Section 2: The Congress shall assemble at least once in every year, and such meeting shall begin at noon on the 3d day of January, unless they by law appoint a different day.

Section 3: If, at the time fixed for the beginning of the term of the President, the President elect shall have died, the Vice President elect shall become President. If a President shall not have been chosen before the time fixed for the beginning of his term, or if the President elect shall have failed to qualify, then the Vice President elect shall act as President until a President shall have qualified; and the Congress may by law provide for the case wherein neither a President elect nor a Vice President elect shall have qualified, declaring who shall then act as President, or the manner in which one who is to act shall be selected, and such person shall act accordingly until a President or Vice President shall have qualified.

Section 4: The Congress may by law provide for the case of the death of any of the persons from whom the House of Representatives may choose a President whenever the right of choice shall have devolved upon them, and for the case of the death of any of the persons from whom the Senate may choose a Vice President whenever the right of choice shall have devolved upon them. . . .

Amendment XXII(Ratified February 27, 1951)*

No person shall be elected to the office of the President more than twice, and no person who has held the office of President, or acted as President, for more than two years of a term to which some other person was elected President shall be elected to the office of the President more than once. But this Article shall not apply to any person holding the office of President, when this Article was proposed by the Congress, and shall not prevent any person who may be holding the office of President, or acting as President, during the term within which this Article becomes operative from holding the office of President or acting as President during the remainder of such term.

Amendment XXIV(Ratified January 23, 1964)*

The right of citizens of the United States to vote in any primary or other election for President or Vice President, for electors for President or Vice President, or for Senator or Representative in Congress, shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or by any State on by reason of failure to pay any poll tax or other tax.

Amendment XXV(Ratified Feb. 10, 1967)*

Section 1: In case of the removal of the President from office or of his death or resignation, the Vice President shall become President.

Section 2: Whenever there is a vacancy in the office of the Vice President, the President shall nominate a Vice President who shall take office upon confirmation by a majority vote of both Houses of Congress.

Section 3: Whenever the President transmits to the President pro tempore of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives his written declaration that he is unable to discharge the powers and duties of his office, and until he transmits to them a written declaration to the contrary, such powers and duties shall be discharged by the Vice President as Acting President.

Section 4: Whenever the Vice President and a majority of either the principal officers of the executive departments or of such other body as Congress may by law provide, transmit to the President pro tempore of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives their written declaration that the President is unable to discharge the powers and duties of his office, the Vice President shall immediately assume the powers and duties of the office as Acting President.

Thereafter, when the President transmits to the President pro tempore of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives his written declaration that no inability exists, he shall resume the powers and duties of his office unless the Vice President and a majority of either the principal officers of the executive departments or of such other body as Congress may by law provide, transmit within four days to the President pro tempore of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives their written declaration that the President is unable to discharge the powers and duties of his office. Thereupon Congress shall decide the issue, assembling within forty-eight hours for that purpose if not in session. If the Congress, within twenty-one days after receipt of the latter written declaration, or, if Congress is not in session, within twenty-one days after Congress is required to assemble, determines by two-thirds vote of both houses that the President is unable to discharge the powers and duties of his office, the Vice President shall continue to discharge the same as Acting President; otherwise, the President shall resume the powers and duties of his office.

Amendment XXVI(Ratified July 1, 1971)*

Section 1: The right of citizens of the United States, who are eighteen years of age or older, to vote shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or by any State on account of age.

NOTES

1. Superseded by the Twelve Amendment.

2. Changed to January 20 by the Twentieth Amendment.

3. Superseded by the Nineteenth and Twenty-Sixth Amendments.

Explanation of symbols: L—by Legislature; GT—by people, on general ticket; D—by people in districts; A—by people, in the state at large; E—by electors. The number in parentheses following the symbol "D" is the number of districts into which the state was divided. As a rule, each district elected 1 elector. The number in parentheses following the symbol "A" is the number of electors elected at large.

1. Each qualified voter voted for 1 elector. The 3 electors who received most votes in the state were elected.

2. Each district elected 4 electors.

3. Two districts chose 5 electors each, and one chose 4 electors.

4. During the years 1804–1828, Maryland chose 11 electors in nine districts, two of the districts elected two members each.

5. One district chose 4 electors; one district, 2 electors; and one district, 1 elector.

6. Each of the eight districts chose 2 electors, from which the General Court (the legislature) selected 1. It also elected 2 electors at large.

7. Two of the districts voted for five members each, and two for three members each. A majority of votes was necessary for a choice. In case of failure to elect by popular vote the General Court supplied the deficiency. In the election of 1792, the people chose 5 electors and the General Court chose 11.

8. A majority of votes was necessary for a popular choice. Deficiencies were filled by the General Court, as in 1792. It also chose 2 electors at large. In 1796 it chose 9 electors, and the people, 7 electors.

9. One district chose 6 electors; one district, 5 electors; one district, 4 electors each; two districts, 3 electors each; and one district, 1 elector.

10. A majority of the popular vote was necessary for a choice. In case of a failure to elect, the legislature supplied the deficiency.

11. A majority of votes was necessary for a choice. In case of a failure to elect 1 or more electors a second election was held by the people, at which choice was made from the first election who had the most votes. The number of candidates in the second election was limited to twice the number of electors wanted.

12. One district elected 3 electors; two districts, 2 electors each; and twenty-seven districts, 1 elector each. The 34 electors thus elected chose 2 presidential electors.

13. The state was divided into four districts, and the members of the legislature residing in each district chose 3 electors.

14. In 1796 and 1800, Tennessee choose 3 presidential electors—1 each for the districts of Washington, Hamilton, and Metro; 3 “electors” for each county in the state were appointed by the legislature; and the “electors” residing in each of the three districts chose 1 of the 3 presidential electors.

NOTES: The seats totals reflect the makeup of the House and Senate at the start of each Congress. Special elections, or changes in party affiliation (but see note 3), that shifted party ratios between elections are not noted.

1. Includes divided Alabama elector slate votes.

2. Vacancy: Rep. Clem Miller, D–Calif. (1959–62) died Oct. 6, 1962, but his name remained on the ballot and he received a plurality.

3. Sen. Richard Shelby (Ala.) switched from the Democratic to the Republican Party the day after the election, bringing the total Republican gain to nine.

4. Democrats are credited with a net gain of thirty seats, including one vacant seat that they previously held and the Vermont at-large seat, which Democrats won, that had been held previously by independent Bernard Sanders.

5. One of the two “miscellaneous” (or Independent) members elected was Democratic incumbent Joseph I. Lieberman of Connecticut who lost a bid for renomination but successfully ran for reelection as an independent. He described himself as an “Independent Democrat” and subsequently caucused with the Democrats. The other “miscellaneous” member was independent Bernard Sanders, who also caucused with Democrats.

6. In 2008 House Democrats are credited with a net gain of twenty-four seats that included one vacant seat that they had previously held.

7. Texas 1928: national and state totals reflect the final outcome of a contested election in which a Democrat was at first certified the winner, but the House decided to seat the Republican.

NOTES: State totals reflect the number of Democrats and Republicans in each House delegation at the start of each Congress. The above totals do not include "other" representatives elected as independent or third-party candidates. Those numbers are California: Progressive 1936 (1). (No formal party. The representative became a Democrat in 1938.) Minnesota: Farmer-Labor 1928–1930 (1), 1932 (5), 1934 (3), 1936 (5), 1938–1942 (1). (Merged with D in 1944.) New York: American Labor 1938–1948 (1). (Party disbanded after 1954.) Ohio: Independent 1950–1952 (1). (Defeated by Democrat in 1954.) Wisconsin: Progressive 1934 (7), 1936–1938 (2), 1940 (3), 1942 (2) and 1944 (1). (Disbanded after 1944. The last Progressive became a Republican in 1946.) Vermont: Independent 1990–2004 (1). Virginia: Independent 2000 (1). National totals: 1928–1930 (1), 1932 (5), 1934 (10), 1936 (13), 1938 (4), 1940 (5), 1942 (4), 1944 (2), 1946–1952 (1), 1990–1998 (1), 2000 (2), and 2002–2004 (1).

NOTES: 1. The Constitution (art. I, sec. 4) provided that "The Congress shall assemble at least once in every year ... on the first Monday in December, unless they shall by law appoint a different day." Pursuant to a resolution of the Continental Congress, the first session of the First Congress convened Mar. 4, 1789. Up to and including May 20, 1820, 18 acts were passed providing for the meeting of Congress on other days in the year. After 1820 Congress met regularly on the first Monday in December until 1934, when the Twentieth Amendment to the Constitution became effective changing the meeting date to Jan. 3. (Until then, brief special sessions of the Senate only were held at the beginning of each presidential term to confirm Cabinet and other nominations—and occasionally at other times for other purposes. The Senate last met in special session from Mar. 4 to Mar. 6, 1933.) The first and second sessions of the First Congress were held in New York City. Subsequently, including the first session of the Sixth Congress, Philadelphia was the meeting place; since then, Congress has convened in Washington.

2. Until adoption of the Twentieth Amendment, the deadline for adjournment of Congress in odd-numbered years was Mar. 3. However, the expiring Congress often extended the "legislative day" of Mar. 3 up to noon of Mar. 4, when the new Congress came officially into being. After ratification of the Twentieth Amendment, the deadline for adjournment of Congress in odd-numbered years was noon on Jan. 3.

3. At one time, the appointment or election of a president pro tempore was considered by the Senate to be for the occasion only, so that more than one appear in several sessions, and in others none was chosen. Since Mar. 12, 1890, they have served until "the Senate otherwise ordered."

4. Elected to count the vote for president and vice president, which was done Apr. 6, 1789, because there was a quorum of the Senate for the first time. John Adams, vice president, appeared Apr. 21, 1789, and took his seat as president of the Senate.

5. Elected Speaker pro tempore for Apr. 20, 1798, and again for May 28, 1798.

6. Elected Speaker Jan. 19, 1814, to succeed Henry Clay, who resigned Jan. 19, 1814.

7. Elected Speaker Nov. 15, 1820, to succeed Henry Clay, who resigned Oct. 28, 1820.

1. Lodge became minority leader on Aug. 24, 1918, filling the vacancy caused by the death of Gallinger on Aug. 17, 1918.

2. Underwood became minority leader on April 27, 1920, filling the vacancy caused by the death of Martin on Nov. 12, 1919. Gilbert M. Hitchcock, D-Neb., served as acting minority leader in the interim.

3. Curtis became majority leader on Nov. 28, 1924, filling the vacancy caused by the death of Lodge on Nov. 9, 1924.

4. Barkley became majority leader on July 22, 1937, filling the vacancy caused by the death of Robinson on July 14, 1937.

5. Bridges became minority leader on Jan. 8, 1952, filling the vacancy caused by the death of Wherry on Nov. 29, 1951.

6. Knowland became majority leader on Aug. 4, 1953, filling the vacancy caused by the death of Taft on July 31, 1953. Taft's vacant seat was filled Democrat Thomas Burke on Nov. 10, 1953. The division of the Senate changed to 48 Democrats, 47 Republicans, and 1 Independent, thus giving control of the Senate to the Democrats. However, Knowland remained as majority leader until the end of the 83rd Congress.

7. Scott became minority leader on Sept. 24, 1969, filling the vacancy caused by the death of Dirksen on Sept. 7, 1969.

8. Lott became majority leader on June 12, 1996, following the resignation of Dole on June 11.

9. The 2000 elections resulted in a 50–50 split between the Democrats and Republicans. With Republican Vice President Richard B. Cheney acting as the nominal Senate leader, the GOP retained technical control of the chamber, allowing party members to be in the primary leadership roles even though the two parties had worked out a power-sharing arrangement on committees. On June 5, 2001, Republican James M. Jeffords of Vermont became an Independent with the intent of caucusing with the Democrats. On June 6, the Democrats achieved a 50–49–1 majority as a result, allowing them to take control of the majority positions in the leadership and on all committees.

★ ELECTION-RELATED WEB SITES

THOUSANDS OF Internet sites provide information about elections and politics. They are operated by candidates, political parties, interest groups, think tanks, trade associations, labor unions, businesses, government agencies, news organizations, polling firms, universities, and individuals.

Election-oriented sites can have short lives. Many spring up just before a particular election and then go dark once the ballots are counted. The sites listed below, however, have proven themselves to be stable sources of ongoing election information—at least as of 2009, when this was written.

Ballot Access News

<http://www.ballot-access.org>

The full texts of the newsletter Ballot Access News from early 1994 to the present is available at this site. The newsletter publishes news about efforts around the country to overturn laws that restrict ballot access by candidates.

Ballot Watch

<http://www.ballotwatch.org>

A database at Ballot Watch has details about initiatives and referendums that are moving toward qualification on state ballots or that have already qualified in states around the country. Users can search the database by subject, status, state, and type of measure.

Census: Voting and Registration Data

<http://www.census.gov/population/www/socdemo/voting.html>

The U.S. Census Bureau operates this site, which has data about registration and voting by various demographic and socioeconomic groups. Data are available from 1964 to the present.

CQ Politics

<http://www.cqpolitics.com>

CQ Politics is published by Congressional Quarterly and provides unique, compelling perspectives on politics, campaigns, and events on Capitol Hill. Commonly covered subjects include the Supreme Court, upcoming elections, the economy, national security, Congress, and the White House.

Electionline.org

<http://www.electionline.org>

Electionline.org is produced by the Pew Center on the States' Election Initiatives. A nonpartisan, non-advocacy Web site, Electionline.org provides up-to-the-minute news and analysis on election reform.

Electoral College Home Page

<http://www.archives.gov/federal-register/electoral-college/index.html>

Background information about how the electoral college operates is available at this site. It also has results for popular votes and electoral college votes in presidential elections from 1789 to the present and provisions of the U.S. Constitution and federal law pertaining to presidential elections.

Federal Election Commission

<http://www.fec.gov>

This site's main feature is a database of campaign finance reports filed from May 1996 to the present by House and presidential candidates, political action committees, and political party committees. Senate reports are not included because they are filed with the secretary of the Senate. Another valuable resource is the Combined Federal/State Disclosure and Election Directory, which provides detailed information about every federal and state office that collects campaign finance data or regulates election spending. For each office, the publication lists the types of data that are available and complete contact information, including a link to the office's Web site.

Federal Election Reform Network

<http://www.reformelections.org>

This site is the home of the National Commission on Federal Election Reform, organized in the wake of the 2000 presidential election by the Miller Center of Public Affairs at the University of Virginia and the Century Foundation. Available on the site is the full text of the bipartisan commission's 114-page final report, issued July 31, 2001. Many of the commission's recommendations were incorporated in the Help America Vote Act signed by President George W. Bush on October 29, 2002.

National Election Studies

<http://www.electionstudies.org>

This site, operated by the University of Michigan's Institute for Social Research and Stanford University, provides a wealth of polling data regarding electoral behavior and public opinion from 1952 to the present.

The New York Times: Politics

<http://www.nytimes.com/pages/politics/index.html>

Political stories from the current day's issue of the New York Times are available through this site. It also offers breaking Washington news stories from the Associated Press, archived Times stories about specific political topics, results from political polls, and political cartoons by a variety of artists.

Opensecrets.org

<http://www.opensecrets.org>

Both raw data about money in politics and reports that analyze all the numbers are available at this site. It is operated by the Center for Responsive Politics, a nonprofit research group. Numerous databases provide detailed campaign finance data for federal candidates and information about contributions by political action committees. The site also has lists of the top federal contributors by industry, profiles of every political action committee registered with the Federal Election Commission, data about soft money contributions, links to sources of state campaign finance data, reports with titles such as Influence Inc.: The Bottom Line on Washington Lobbyists and The Politics of Sugar, and much more.

The Pew Research Center for the People & the Press

<http://www.people-press.org>

The Pew site presents the results of polls regarding the press, politics, and public policy issues conducted from 1995 to the present. The polls measure public attitudes about topics such as China policy, Congress, the economy, elections, and the Internet's impact in elections.

Political Money Line

<http://www.tray.com/fecinfo>

Political Money Line, which is operated by a private company, offers an extraordinary collection of federal campaign finance data. The site has lists of the top contributors from each state, lists of the leading political action committees in various categories, data on soft money contributions, numerous databases that provide itemized information about receipts and expenditures by federal candidates and political action committees, and much more. Most of the information is free, although some sections of the site are limited to subscribers.

Political Resources on the Net

<http://www.politicalresources.net>

Links to more than 24,000 election and politics-related Web sites around the world are presented at this site. The links lead to sites operated by political parties, organizations, governments, media outlets, and others. Users can search the whole site or browse the links by region or country.

Political Science Resources: United States Politics

<http://www.lib.umich.edu/govdocs>

This site of the University of Michigan Documents Center offers links to hundreds of Web sites about politics and elections. The listings are divided into more than two dozen categories, including campaign finance, cybercitizenry, elections, foreign policy, lobbying groups, news sources, political parties, primaries, public opinion, public policy issues, statistics, and think tanks, among others.

Politico

<http://www.politico.com>

POLITICO.com is a multiplatform news source that reports on events in Congress, the interworkings of lobbying in Washington, and election campaigns. POLITICO shares editorial content with news outlets from across the country.

Politics1

<http://www.politics1.com>

Politics1 provides a huge set of annotated links to Web sites operated by candidates, political parties, election offices, and election news sources in states around the country. It also has links to sites for presidential candidates, the two major parties, third parties, and political news sources.

Politiconline

<http://www.politiconline.com>

This site's highlight is its large collection of links to news stories about how the Internet is being used in elections and politics around the world.

Project Vote Smart

<http://www.vote-smart.org>

The Project Vote Smart site provides biographies of thousands of candidates and elected officials in offices ranging from state legislator to president, voting records for members of Congress, detailed campaign finance data for members of Congress, the texts of ballot initiatives from states around the country, links to thousands of other political Web sites, and lots more.

Voter Information

Washingtonpost.com: On Politics

<http://www.washingtonpost.com/wp-dyn/politics>

The latest political news from the Washington Post and the Associated Press highlights this page. It also has archived stories about dozens of political issues, such as health care and gun control, election coverage, and more.

POLITICAL PARTY ABBREVIATIONS

THE FOLLOWING LIST provides a key to the political party abbreviations used in Guide to U.S. Elections, sixth edition. This list was developed by Congressional Quarterly from two sources for party designations: the Inter-University Consortium for Political and Social Research (ICPSR), for most election returns up to 1973; and the America Votes series (compiled biennially by CQ Press in Washington, D.C.) for most election returns after 1974. In cases of discrepancy, the ICPSR party designation was used.

The election data obtained from the ICPSR contain nearly 1,500 different party labels. In many cases the party labels represent combinations of multiparty support received by individual candidates. However, in preparing the returns for publication, approximately 1,000 of the party labels were eliminated because the candidate(s) did not receive at least 5 percent of the votes cast. The names of the parties appear below in the form they were obtained from ICPSR and America Votes.
